Court Allows U.S. to Sell Atlantic Oil Leases Today

Federal Appeals Bench Lifts Ban on Deal for 876,750 Acres Off L.I. and Jersey —Later Reversal Is Called Possible

By ARNOLD H. LUBASCH

A decision permitting the Federal Government to go ahead today with the first sale of oil and natural-gas leases in the Atlantic Ocean was issued yesterday by a Federal appeals court.

The Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit decided to lift a preliminary injunction that a Federal district judge had imposed last Friday to block the sale, which is expected to raise $400 million to $600 million for the Federal Government.

In a unanimous decision, a three-judge panel of the appeals court ruled in New York City that no "irreparable harm" would result from allowing the sale to be held before a full appeal could be heard on the environmental issues next month.

The three judges stressed during a court session that the sale of the leases could be rescinded later, if necessary, after the appeals court heard arguments on the merits of the environmental complaints by New York State, Long Island and the Natural Resources Defense Council.

The panel, consisting of Ellsworth A. Van Graafeiland, Lee P. Gagliardi and Robert J. Kelleher, said that the Court of Appeals was not considering the merits of the environmental complaints at this time but only whether to stay the preliminary injunction issued last Friday by Judge Jack B. Weinstein in Federal District Court in Brooklyn.

Lawyers for the opponents of the leasing sale said yesterday that they would ask the United States Supreme Court for an order to block the sale.

Judge Weinstein had issued his preliminary injunction on the ground that there was a deficiency in the environmental impact statement that the Interior Department had prepared

REGENTS BID STATE MEET 80% OF COSTS OF CITY U. BY 1980

Board Reaffirms Opposition to Merger of 2 Systems— Construction Halt Urged

By DAVID VIDAL

The State Board of Regents yesterday proposed a financial plan calling for a substantial increase of the state's share of the City University senior college operating budgets by 1979-80.

Under the plan, the state's share would rise to 80 percent while New York City's share would be reduced from 50 to 20 percent.

At the same time, the Regents reaffirmed their opposition to any merger of the State and City University systems, citing City University's "unique orientation to the social and educational needs of the City of New York." They also recommended that state and private colleges end "all but the most crucial construction," saying the need for new facilities had been met.

Two Hearings Set

These and other recommendations were released here yesterday in "The Regents Tentative Statewide Plan for the Development of Postsecondary Education," a document the law requires them to present every four years. Public hearings on the plan are scheduled for Sept. 1 in New York and Sept. 2 in Albany while the final draft is to be presented to Governor Carey on Nov. 1.

Until the uncertainty and confusion of the fiscal crisis the city and the state each paid half of the senior college budgets of the City University, excluding tuition and fee income, but this matching formula has been suspended for the 1976-77 academic year and a long-term pattern of financing is yet to be worked out.

Merger Proposed

Last spring, the city announced its intention to end its $140 million financing of the City University's nine senior colleges by July 1978.

And last week, a debate between the City and State University systems intensified when it came to light that Manly Fleischmann, the chairman of a special panel of State University trustees, had suggested a merger that would group the senior colleges and the two-year colleges into two separate administrations under a single board of trustees.

The 192-page Regents plan, released at a news conference attended by Theodore M. Black, chancellor of the Regents Board, Carl Pforzheimer, vice chancellor, and T. Edward Hollander, the deputy comissioner for higher and professional education, said the cost of its implementation would be $1.36 billion, or a 9.8 percent increase of $121 million over fiscal 1976, "only 12 percent of the estimated state revenues and well within the parameters discussed."

However, Mr. Black said that

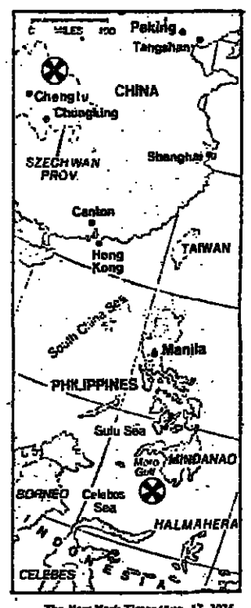
2 Quakes Strike Far East: In China, Off Philippines



The New York Times/Aug. 17, 1976

Crosses mark areas where earthquakes were reported.

By United Press International

TOKYO, Tuesday, Aug. 17—Two earthquakes struck the Far East last night and early today, according to seismological reports. One was in China, about 800 miles southwest of the area of the devastating quake in the northern part of the country three weeks ago, and the other was reported off the Philippines.

The quake in China, which, the Japanese Meteorological Agency said, struck at 10:11 P.M. Monday New York time, was centered on Szechwan Province, about 95 miles north of the city of Chengtu. It registered 7.3 on the Richter scale. No reports of damage have been received from China.

The second earthquake, centered in the Gulf of Moro near the west coast of the southern Philippine island of Mindanao, came at 12:11 A.M. New York time. The National Earthquake Center at Golden, Colo., re-

Disorders in South Africa: Plot, or Spontaneous Ire?

By JOHN F. BURNS

Special to The New York Times

JOHANNESBURG, Aug. 16—On June 16 10,000 black students staging a protest march in the black township of Soweto ran into a police cordon. The students jeered, stones were thrown, and a policeman opened fire, killing Hector Peterson, a 13-year-old in a school blazer.

In the nine weeks since, confrontations between police and demonstrators have erupted in at least 70 black townships across the four provinces of South Africa, from Pietersburg in the north to Cape Town in the south, the cumulative death toll stands at 219.

Was it an organized insurrection, coordinated by Communist-inspired "agitators," as the Government insists? Or a spontaneous eruption of black anger against apartheid, as leaders of the demonstrators say? The evidence provides no clear-cut answer, but suggests that both elements have been present to some degree.

In fact, since the second round of disturbances broke out in Soweto on Aug. 4, proponents of the two theories, perhaps unwittingly, seem to have reached something like a synthesis of views. However, they continue to be sharply divided as to what the Government should do.

White liberals, initially inclined to see the Government cries of "plot" as a smokescreen, have discerned a pat-

BUCKLEY DROPS PRESIDENTIAL BID

Says That Lack of Support for Effort Leaves Him a Senate Candidate Only

By FRANK LYNN

Special to The New York Times

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 16—Senator James L. Buckley punctured his Presidential trial balloon today after it failed to get off the ground.

The 53-year-old Senator acknowledged the absence of a groundswell for his candidacy and told a crowded news conference, "I will not be a candidate for anything but re-election to the Senate."

He denied that his abortive Presidential candidacy had damaged his chances for the party's Senate nomination in New York or for re-election. "I don't think there are any fences to be repaired," he said.

Delegation Developments

Some of Mr. Buckley's leading New York critics—most of whom had interpreted the Buckley maneuver as a move against President Ford — appeared forgiving Richard M. Rosenbaum, chairman of the New York Republican Party, said he was pleased. Vice President Rockefeller brushed off the move by Mr. Buckley. "It really was not an important thing," he said.

The Buckley incident highlighted activities in party delegations from New York, New Jersey and Connecticut, which included the following developments:

¶Despite criticism from within the delegation for his alleged "heavy handedness" in gavelling down requests last night to invite President Ford and Ronald Reagan to address the New

Reagan's Plank Criticizes Ford-Kissinger Policies

By RICHARD L. MADDEN

Special to The New York Times

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 16—Setting up a probable floor fight for tomorrow night, strategists for Ronald Reagan proposed today a platform plank implicitly criticizing the foreign policies of President Ford and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger.

The aim of the Reagan move in trying to add a plank entitled "morality in foreign policy" to the document approved by the Platform Committee last Friday appeared to be to score a psychological victory over Mr. Ford when the platform is considered tomorrow night by the convention, only 24 hours before the Presidential balloting.

At the same time, a second platform fight appeared to be assured when 29 delegates, led by women members of the Platform Committee, filed a minority report seeking to delete the section endorsing a constitutional amendment "to restore protection of the right to life for unborn children."

Those were the only two minority reports filed by the deadline this afternoon, when the Platform Committee held its final meeting.

Another attempt to try to challenge the platform's endorsement of the equal rights amendment failed, according to delegates, when Reagan aides passed the word that they wanted to concentrate their floor fights on party rules, which are to be considered tomorrow just before the plat-

Uncommitted Delegates Under Intense Pressure

Special to The New York Times

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 16—If the Mississippi delegation to the Republican National Convention was looking for political power when it came to Kansas City with its 30 delegates bound to be "uncommitted" under a unit rule, that goal has been accomplished.

But the cost of power has come high.

The delegation is under 24-hour siege by the candidates, the press and the curious. No one seems quite sure as to when the closely divided group might vote to commit or how the vote might come out.

In a larger sense, what is happening to the Mississippi delegation is representative of the pressure being put on a number of other pivotal delegations in Kansas City, among them the groups from West Virginia and Pennsylvania.

The situation is frenetic, the heat intense.

Some members of the Mississippi delegation have had almost no sleep in the last few days. Clarke Reed, the once-outspoken delegation chairman, stalks hotel lobbies and the convention floor, mumbling, "Wait and see, wait and see."

Perhaps worst of all, the unit rule—it means the winner takes all when the vote to commit is finally taken—has resulted in confusion and bitter bickering within the delegation

RULES TEST IS KEY

Californian's Strategy Is Aimed at Way to Fill 2d Spot

By R. W. APPLE Jr.

Special to The New York Times

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 16—President Ford won enough public commitments in the first hours of the 31st Republican National Convention tonight to assure him of a majority of delegates, but the outcome of the nominating roll-call remained in doubt.

As a succession of party orators castigated Jimmy Carter, the Democratic nominee, Mr. Ford, reached the magic number of 1,130 in The New York Times's tabulation. But his nomination was still threatened by the prospect of divisive floor maneuvers by Ronald Reagan's forces.

The final supporters swung behind the President on a sweltering Midwestern night seven grueling months after he won his first delegates in the snows of New Hampshire. They were state Senator G. E. Hughes of Delaware, Mary Gorman of Sundance, Wyo., and James E. Crockett of Wytheville, Va.

Baker Attacks Carter

Senator Howard H. Baker Jr. struck the keynote of the convention in a rousing attack on Mr. Carter in which he warned the Democrats against "rattling the dusty old skeletons of Watergate."

The Tennessee Senator, a central figure in the Senate Watergate hearings of 1973, was joined in his assault on the man heavily favored to win the Presidency in November by Vice President Rockefeller, Senator Robert Dole of Kansas, the temporary convention chairman, and Senator Barry Goldwater of Arizona, the 1964 nominee.

Far from the thronged floor of the Kemper Arena, where a largely ceremonial morning session was followed by an evening of pointing with pride and viewing with alarm, President Ford and Ronald Reagan and their agents spent the day exhorting every wavering delegate among the 2,259 to fall into line.

The latest New York Times tabulation of delegate strength gave the President 1,130 and Mr. Reagan 1,039—a gain of 10 for Mr. Ford and 2 for the Californian in the last 24 hours. Only 90 delegates remain uncommitted.

Nonetheless, unresolved rules

The city authorities responded today with the recall of police officers and the imposition of a 10 P.M. curfew for all children 17 years old and under.

The police arrested 47 persons, 18 of them adults. The youths were turned over to the juvenile authorities for Wayne County, while the adults were charged with offenses ranging from armed robbery to disorderly conduct.

Although the police are still investigating the disturbance and taking complaints, they have not collected any weapons and there were no police reports filed of persons going to hospitals, other than the two women, for observation.

Five of the adults charged with armed robbery were arraigned today, but their cases were dismissed because the victims whose belongings they had when they were charged failed to come to court to prosecute.

Syrian Forces on the Move in Lebanon

Franjieh, in Address to Nation, Proposes a New Cease-Fire

Special to The New York Times

BEIRUT, Lebanon, Aug. 16—Syrian troops were on the move aagin in Lebanon today, entering the mountain town of Hammana 18 miles east of here, according to leftist and rightist sources.

The Syrians also sent reinforcements into the area of the Christian town of Jezzin, about 20 miles south of the capital, according to a leftist radio station. It said that the Syrians at Jezzin had shelled leftist and Palestianian positions at the nearby town of Roum.

The reported movements of Syrian troops, coinsided with the intensification of clashes between right-wing Christian forces and Palestinian guerrillas in the mountainous region around the towns of Ain Tura and Matein, 30 miles east of Beirut.

Pressure on Leftists

The Syrian move into Hammana was viewed as an effort to increase pressure on Palestinian and leftist forces in the mountains east of Beirut. And the Syrian reinforcements may have been intended to stop the Palestinians from sending additional troops from their bases in the south to the eastern mountains.

Meanwhile, President Suleiman Franjieh proposed a truce in the civi lwar to enable the rival Lebanese factions to find a solution to the country's impasse.

However, he set as a condition for such a truce the application of agreements already concluded with the Palestinian guerrillas.

This is mainly the agreement reached seven years ago that imposed restrictions on the presence of guerrillas inside Lebanon but allowed them to establish bases near the border with Israel.

Six Years in Office

President Franjieh spoke in a nationwide address on the occasion of the sixth anniversary of his election to office. The President's term is due to expire Sept. 23.

In what was regarded as an indication that he intends to turn his office over to his successor, Mr. Franjieh wished the "new regime" success.

Now that they have captured Tell Zaatar and have asked for Palestinian withdrawal from the eastern mountains, the rightists, who are under the formal leadership of the 69-year-old Mr. Franjieh, have shown readiness to begin negotiations.

Interior Minister Camile Chamoun, who was regarded as the main militant in the rightist camp, has called for an end to the fighting and "withdrawal of combatants."

Meanwhile a prominent guerrilla leader has held the Syrians responsible for the fall last week of the Palestinian camp of Tell Zaatar to right-wing forces.

Salah Khalaf, better known as Abu Iyads and who is the second in command in the guerrilla movement after Yasir Arafat, told a political rally here yesterday that certain oil-producing Arab nations were financing the Syrian military campaign in Lebanon. He did not name the countries.

The text of his speech was carried in the press here today.

He predicted that the "battle in Lebanon will be very, very long, as will be the confrontation with the Syrians." He added that "there is no room in our ranks for those who want to cut the time short."

The guerrilla leader expressed what was regarded as implicit criticism of the attitude of the Soviet Union, and indicated that Moscow had advised the Palestinians to negotiate instead of confront the Syrians.

Syrian officials and representatives of the Palestine Liberation Organization signed an agreement in Damascus on July 29 on the question of seeking a solution to the Lebanese crisis. However, disagreement soon emerged about the composition of a joint committee that was proposed for bringing about a cease-fire.

The Palestinian leader, addressing "friendly states," which was taken as an allusion to the Soviet Union, said: "What have you given us? We do not want you to tell us to reach an understanding with the Syrians. You have lost many of your positions in the Arab world because you did not understand the conspiracy. We are not asking for the impossible: we want a ship carrying flour and hoisting the Russian flag to come to Saida and defy Israel."

The Palestinians have been complaining against what they called an Israeli blockade against the Moslem ports of Saida and Tyre in southern Lebanon. The Israeli navy during the past few weeks has repeatedly intercepted and detained ships bound for the two ports, and subjected them to thorough searches before releasing them.

Israel Broadcast Tells Of Lebanon 'Blockade'

TEL AVIV, Aug. 16 (AP) — Israeli patrol boats are blockading the Lebanese coast and seizing weapons headed for leftist Moslems and Palestimians battling right-wing Christians in Lebanon's civil war, the state television said today.

It was the first semiofficial confirmation of previous reports that Israel was aiding the Christians by stopping the arms shipments, primarily from Libya and Egypt.

"Navy boats today stand as a barrier between the supply ships and the Lebanese coast," the television station said in a long report on the increased sea patrols.

"The significance of this operation is a maritime blockade of arms to the left and Moslem forces," the report added. Israel's military command declined to comment on the broadcast.

Schools and companies have standard evacuation plans — some even using sound-effect tapes — as do all emergency services, including the Self-Defense Forces, which receive regular disaster training. Fire departments call surprise earthquake alerts.

Last month the National Police Agency staged the largest evacuation drill in Japan's history, mobilizing 58,000 policemen, 2,200 emergency vehicles and a squadron of helicopters to simulate a response to an earthquake on the scale of the 1923 disaster.

Three hours after the drill had ended, a real earthquake struck.

The Tokyo Metropolitan Fire Board has designated 121 official open-area shelter spots. More than 200 roads to these areas have been surveyed and designated as less dangerous. These routes are marked and lined with thousands of fire extinguishers in sidewalk display cases. 429 underground water cisterns and 605 emergency pumps.

2 Kinds of Fire Policies

Schools and other buildings are equipped with first-aid kits. Only in recent years have building codes and improved construction methods permitted the erection of skyscrapers, and there still are not very many. Insurance companies sell two kinds of fire-damage policies—one for regular fires and one for fires following earthquakes. The latter is more expensive.

Experts are developing a new legal concept, the "right to safety," by which governments would be held legally responsible for the lack of any disaster preparations.

Next month comes the annual "earthquake preparation week" when neighborhood alert groups will begin fall meetings.

Tokyo's wards regularly increase the number of emergency food-storage sites. Almost all Tokyo's 28,000 taxicabs are equipped with fire extinguishers to help fight blazes. But since streets might well be blocked with debris, the city has appropriated funds to buy special firefighting aircraft.

Schools stage earthquake catch-phrase contests. One entry: "Never make haste. Just crawl under a desk and wait for guidance."

Last summer Koto Ward, believed to be one of the most vulnerable in Tokyo's 826 square miles, staged an evacuation rehearsal with 12,000 participants.

In Minato, a ward heavily populated with foreigners, the public library has English-language tapes detailing survival techniques and evacuation plans.

In nearby Yokohama, city officials have built an earthquake-demonstration vehicle, a small house on the back of a specially equipped truck that can simulate the disconcerting feelings of an earthquake and let residents practice responses.

The National Land Agency has even drawn up plans to turn some Tokyo suburbs into a new national capital, should the old one be destroyed.

An indication that all this preparation has had a calming effect on the populace was provided in a recent poll of 1,250 women. They were asked what they feared most. "Earthquakes" were rated second. First place went to "price hikes."

The quake in Szechwan Province followed reports from the southern city of Canton that a warning had been issued there of a possible earthquake in the far-southeastern area in the next few days.

Earth's Forces at Work

The earthquakes reported in China and the Philippines areas are both believed related to forces pressing the Asian region from the east and southwest.

The disturbance in the Moro Gulf was reported about 250 miles west of the Philippine Trench, where the westward-moving floor of the Pacific begins to descend into the earth's interior beneath the islands of the Philippines. This descent causes earthquakes as well as the volcanic activity that has created many mountains in those islands.

The Chinese quake took place in the heart of Asia where the earth's crust periodically gives way in response to converging pressures from the Pacific and from India to the southwest. The most devastating earthquake in history took place there in 1556, killing more than 800,000 people.

Nonwhites' March Halted In a Suburb of Cape Town

CAPE TOWN, Aug. 16 (AP)—As shoppers and passersby watched, police chased and clubbed nonwhite students who were marching through a white suburb today to protest the detention of fellow students.

Other incidents of violence were reported today in the Cape Town area, where clashes between blacks and police officers last week left at least 30 blacks dead and more than 100 injured.

Today policemen armed with staves broke up a crowd of 700 young persons of mixed ancestry, whom the Government terms colored, outside a courthouse in the white surburb of Bellville. Ten students were appearing in the courthouse on charges of public violence and arson stemming from last week's disturbances.

Leader Is Reported Detained

The students were told the gathering was illegal under the Riotous Assemblies Act and that any attempts to continue the protest would be halted. The students then marched in the direction of the University of the Western Cape, a "colored-only" institution, followed by a convoy of riot policemen in trucks. When they reached a busy shopping area, the police began swinging their staves to break up groups of students who tried to remain together.

In another incident, nonwhite students interrupted their classes in the nonwhite suburb of Grassy Park to demonstrate solidarity with others in the black townships of Nyanga, Langa and Guguletu, where the violence occurred last week.

The three townships were reported quiet today. So far more than 100 blacks have been arrested on a variety of charges stemming from the riots, including murder, arson, theft, assault and public violence.

Meanwhile Jeanie Noel, a top official of the Black Women's Federation, was arrested at her home in the coastal city of Durban by four members of the special security police, according to her mother, who said the police had refused to explain the arrest.

The federation leader was accused Friday of trespassing on the campus of Durban's M.L. Sultan Technical College, where she had addressed 100 students.

The security police in Cape Town have arrested a nonwhite divinity student, Pieter Geldenbloem, who is a member of the University of Western Cape's student representative council, the South African Press Association reported. The news agency said another divinity student from the university, Russell Bothman, was missing and believed held by the security police.

Kohl Says He'd Bring 'Sounder' Policy in Bonn

By CRAIG R. WHITNEY
Special to The New York Times

ST. GILGEN, Austria — Helmut Kohl, taking a breather in the Alps from his campaign for the West German Chancellorship, put on his hiking boots the other day and climbed one of the mile-high mountains he can see from the terrace of his spacious vacation cottage.

"I shouldn't have tried it today," he said as he came down in a light rain and doffed a soaked sweatshirt. "When we got to the summit, we were lost in fog."

Seven weeks before the general elections, public opinion polls indicate that Mr. Kohl has an even chance of replacing Helmut Schmidt at the summit of West German political life.

But the swarthy, 46-year-old Christian Democrat, an inherently cautious man, realizes that politics can be even more fickle than the weather and that the vote could go against him on Oct. 3.

For now, he is relaxing on the shores of the Wolfgangsee, a crowded lake resort in the foothills of the Austrian Alps near Salzburg. Over a glass of white Moselle wine, he reflected at some length on his philosophy, his origins and his plans for his country if he is elected.

'Freedom or Socialism'

His campaign slogan is an apocalyptic-sounding "Freedom or Socialism." But when questioned on what would be different about West Germany if he ruled it instead of Mr. Schmidt and the Social Democrats, Mr. Kohl emphasized style over substance, a change in attitude rather than direction.

His détente, he said, would be "more realistic" than Mr. Schmidt's. His foreign policy would be "calmer" than the dramatic initiatives of the last seven years. His economic policy would be "sounder," his fight against terrorism and Communist subversion from within "harder."

Mr. Kohl says he believes that "what is good in private life is good in politics too." His personal style is typical of the German middle class: a crucifix of wood hangs from the cottage wall; a baby grand piano belonging to his wife, Hannelore, stands in the corner, with a simplified book of popular songs.

His two young sons, Peter, aged 11, and Walter, 13, wander in and out of the room, answer the telephone, whittle. Mr. Kohl's German — he speaks no other language — is informal in the fashion of his native southern state, the Rhineland-Pfalz, rather more relaxed than Mr. Schmidt's sibilant North German style.

Contrast With Schmidt Cited

"Helmut Schmidt has a definite Kohl complex," he says. "We are so different — we come typologically and sociologically from such different worlds." Mr. Kohl, who at 6 feet 4 inches stands a full head higher than Chancellor Schmidt, has lived near Ludwigshafen on the Rhine all his life and says: "I don't have the complexes my opponent has — I don't need platform shoes, I have no problem of authority."

Mr. Kohl's whole adult life has been politics, and until recent years his reputation was made in the state of Rhineland-Pfalz. He has been Governor there since 1969, presiding over an administration that has reformed the state school system and attracted small and midde-size industry to what had been primarily a rural region.

"When I became head of my party in 1973," he recalled, "the feeling was, 'Who is this unfortunate who is going to get stuck with the nomination?'" In 1973 the Christian Democrats were directionless and demoralized after defeat at the hands of Willy Brandt the year before.

What will he do differently if he wins in October? "One thing I'd like to accomplish," he said, "is, in contacts with other leaders, to bring about a more normal relationship to the Germans."

"Helmut Schmidt has been campaigning by lecturing the Italians, the French and the British along the lines of "What's good for Germany is good for the world,'" he complained. "I'm from another generation, I was only a schoolboy in 1945, and I don't believe the world can keep presenting us with the bill for what happened before then either.

"But as Adenauer once told a group of us young men, it's only prudent for a German to keep his head down—not to go around in sackcloth and ashes, but no lectures on German superiority either."

The ability to compromise has been Mr. Kohl's strength. In state politics he has brought his party, after years of bitter opposition, to pledge continuation of the Eastern treaties of Mr. Brandt and Mr. Schmidt, though for election purposes he calls those treaties a failure.

"We support détente, and arms reductions, but we want the other side finally to live up to its international commitments," he said.

"There's nothing in the existing treaties that provides for innocent people being shot down on the public streets at the borders," he went on, speaking after a week in which East German border guards shot down a sightseer from Hamburg and a Communist truck driver from Italy at the heavily guarded border.

East Bloc Needs Credits

How would he change the emphasis of the Eastern policies? "The whole East Bloc needs our economic help," he says. The Soviet Union and East Germany are both dependent on credits from the West to finance their trade, and the Communist states now owe West Germany about $8 billion. Mr. Kohl believes Bonn could gain political concessions by withholding new credits or calling in existing ones.

But he does not want a return to the cold war, as his position on German reunification shows.

"The principle is written in our Constitution—that no one has the right to give up a policy whose goal is the eventual reunification of Germany," he pointed out. "But in a realistic view of the world, this is a goal that could take generations beyond my own to achieve."

His government, Mr. Kohl said, would emphasize the urgency of unifying Western Europe rather than the Eastern policies' aim of reconciliation with old enemies to the east. He sees the biggest obstacle in the growing apart of economically strong West Germany from her weaker neighbors in France, Italy and Britain.

Help for Italy Foreseen

"In the long run," he said, "we cannot achieve the unification of Europe if a social and economic gulf separates one country from another.

"To fill the gap will cost money," he acknowledged. But "particularly, we would be prepared to help Italy," he said. He believes economic aid there could forestall the growth of Communist strength.

His prescription for economic recovery for West Germany, on the face of it, sounds like Mr. Schmidt's: "We have to create a climate of confidence for investors," he says, with tax reductions and premiums for capital goods.

"We have to encourage more job-training programs, with tax incentives or with a combination of state and private funds," he went on. "We cannot permit the young generation to lose hope — we need the dreams and vision of youth."

Germany under Mr. Kohl would be more cautious and less self-assertive than it has been under Mr. Schmidt.

"We have to think about how to live within our means, how to protect what we've achieved so far without necessarily indulging ourselves in the future," he declared.

"Under my chancellorship we would march into the future with short, safe steps, perhaps, instead of precipitous big leaps."

Town in Italy's Toxic Area Misses Children It Sent Av

By STEVEN V. ROBERTS
Special to The New York Times

MEDA SUD, Italy, Aug. 14 —The children have left Meda Sud. The health officials came a few days ago and put them on buses, and everyone cried as they rode away.

"It's ugly without them," said Perla Sangiovanni, a mother of six. "We're so used to seeing them in the streets, hearing them laughing and crying and fighting. Now it's empty."

Life is ugly and empty for nearly everybody these days in this industrial region just north of Milan. On July 10 an accident at the Icmesa chemical plant in nearby Meda blanketed several towns with a poison cloud containing a highly toxic chemical called dioxin.

The most contaminated area of about 300 acres was completely evacuated, and only a few hundred yards from the Sangiovannis' apartment barbed wire is stretched across the road and armed soldiers turn back all traffic. In fringe areas such as Meda Sud the adults have been allowed to stay, but children under 12 were taken to camps and resorts as a precaution.

Many people here are furious that it took two weeks before the worst-affected area was sealed off. "They should have moved us earlier, the day it happened," said a 25-year-old carpenter, one of 730 people who eventually left their homes.

The carpenter, who is now living in a luxury apartment complex at state expense, said that his 4-year-old daughter had played outside for several days after the accident and had developed skin blotches. After 10 days in the hospital the girl was released, but she still shows signs of the disease, the father said.

Doctors have warned local women in their first three months of pregnancy that they might bear deformed infants. The Government has approved abortions for these women, and three have already been performed despite the objections of the Roman Catholic Church.

In a crowd gathered at a coffee shop in Meda Sud the other evening everyone agreed that abortion was a good idea.

"Isn't it a sin to bring a deformed child into the world?" said Mrs. Sangiovanni, a friendly, outspoken woman. "My sister has one, and it's very sad to see."

Doctors have also urged couples not to start new pregnancies for six months, but that is a more difficult problem. The Italian practice is to have a child right after marriage, and many young brides do not want to wait, Mrs. Sangiovanni noted.

The accident at Icmesa has also affected the economy of the district. Many people here raise their own produce and livestock, but now they cannot eat, or even touch, anything grown locally.

Cesano Maderno, just south of here, is a center for the furniture industry, but customers are canceling orders or demanding large discounts. Some shipments from the area have reportedly been stopped at the Swiss border.

A man from Cesano Maderno who sells clothes at an open market said that his trade was down about 75 percent.

"Even if the goods come from Milan or farther south, people are afraid to buy them," he said. "Regardless of what we say they do not believe us."

"My regular customers come in and will buy only packaged and canned food," added Luigi Rubino, a grocer. "I tell them, how do you expect me to live?"

Warned 20 Years Ago

People here say that Icmesa was always a health hazard. Antonio Crevisio, a construction worker, became suspicious when a neighbor's sheep died after drinking water near the factory. Residents of Meda Sud complained repeatedly about the refuse and the odor from the factory.

"When I moved to this area 20 years ago I was warned not to work at Icmesa," said Mr. Crevisio, who has now left his home. "After three months, they told me, you'll be ruined."

Like all refugees, Mr. Crevisio and his friends want to go home, but they know the chances are not good. As a bricklayer from Seveso noted, "What we talk about among ourselves, more than anything else, are the things we left behind—our homes, our possessions, whether we'll ever see them again."

In peripheral areas like Meda Sud and Cesano Maderno, proposals have been made to burn all vegetation and strip away the top layer of earth. Even if the residents are allowed to stay, said Mr. Rubino, the grocer, the place will look "just like the Sahara."

"All these people here should be on vacation," Mr. Rubino said, gesturing toward a crowded coffee shop. "But we're all afraid that if we leave, when we come back we'll find the town fenced off. I'm not moving from this spot."

Accepting the Risks

Many residents of this region moved here from southern Italy to look for work, and even after the Icmesa accident they are willing to accept the ills of industrialization.

"We are from Naples," said Mrs. Sangiovanni, whose husband is a school janitor. "Down there the air is clean and we eat fresh fish, but there is no work. Here it's ugly, and there's poison in the air, but we have work."

"We don't like the effects, but we have to have industry," added the bricklayer from Seveso. "If it goes away, we're all dead."

One man in the shop, Benedetto Carona, has worked at Icmesa for 12 years and thinks the danger has been exaggerated. "The have created too m ror," he insisted. "T ical industry is — there are alway there are always oc

LISBON, Aug. 16—One of the legends of the Portuguese revolution, Gen. Antonio de Spinola, returned here last week after 17 months of self-exile but the impact has been minimal.

There were a few articles of praise in the right-wing press, some mild cartoons of the monocled former general, protests by the Communist Party against his return and a few orderly demonstrations by the extreme left against "the rise of fascism."

But the country remained generally indifferent to the return of the 66-year-old former general, whose book, "Portugal and the Future," helped set off the April 25, 1974, revolution against the old dictatorship and who was chosen by the military as the first President. He was later implicated in various right-wing coup attempts and, in exile, set up the Democratic Movement for the Liberation of Portugal.

His name was eased out of the headlines over the weekend and replaced by reports of a railroad crash near Lisbon, the capsizing of a ferryboat in the Azores, the collapse of bleachers in a village bullring and automobile accidents.

"Spinola must answer to the law just like any other citizen," Prime Minister Mário Soares said, insisting that the case must be "dedramatized."

And this is what is happening. The former general was arrested on his arrival a week ago for his involvement in a coup attempt on March 11, 1975. He was held for less than 48 hours, then released pending trial, as have been some 200 other persons implicated in the affair. Since then, however, he has been questioned by the authorities about his relations with the Democratic Movement, recently linked to a wave of bombing attacks.

"The return of Spinola is in effect a mere episode, and should be seen as such," the independent weekly O Jornal said "Portuguese democracy is beginning to be sufficiently solid and the leaders sufficiently mature to resist these little tricks."

In fact, the new democratic institutions have begun to function and passed several hurdles last week.

President António Ramalho Eanes took office last month with a pledge to restore the authority of the state, which has lived through two years of mild anarchy since the revolution. Last week, the military authorities announced the arrest of 13 persons charged with belonging to a right-wing organization held responsible for terrorism that has troubled Portugal for more than a year.

Among the arrests was the Oporto police chief, Maj. Artur Mota Freitas. This was taken as evidence that the authorities were determined to get to the heart of the matter.

At the same time, the President pushed forward his plan for restoring discipline to the armed forces by separating military and political functions. Last week, it was announced that members of the Council of the Revolution, which serves as an advisory body for the President and as a constitutional watchdog, would have to choose between their posts on the council and their military commands.

Two well known leftists gave up their commands in favor of the council — Brig. Manuel Franco Charais, commander of the Central Military Region, and Brig. Pedro Pezerat Correia, commander of the Southern Region. Two conservatives, Gen. Anibal Pinho Freire, commander of the National Air Space, and Brig. António Pires Veloso, commander of the Northern Military Region, chose to keep their commands and resigned from the council. A centrist, Brig. Vasco Lourenço, kept his council job, gave up the command of the Lisbon Military Region, but was named military governor of the capital.

At the same time, the President has scrupulously followed the rules for setting up this country's first constitutional government in half a century. He called on the Socialist leader, Mr. Soares, whose party had won last April's parliamentary election, to form the new government, giving him free rein on the composition of the Cabinet and contents of his program.

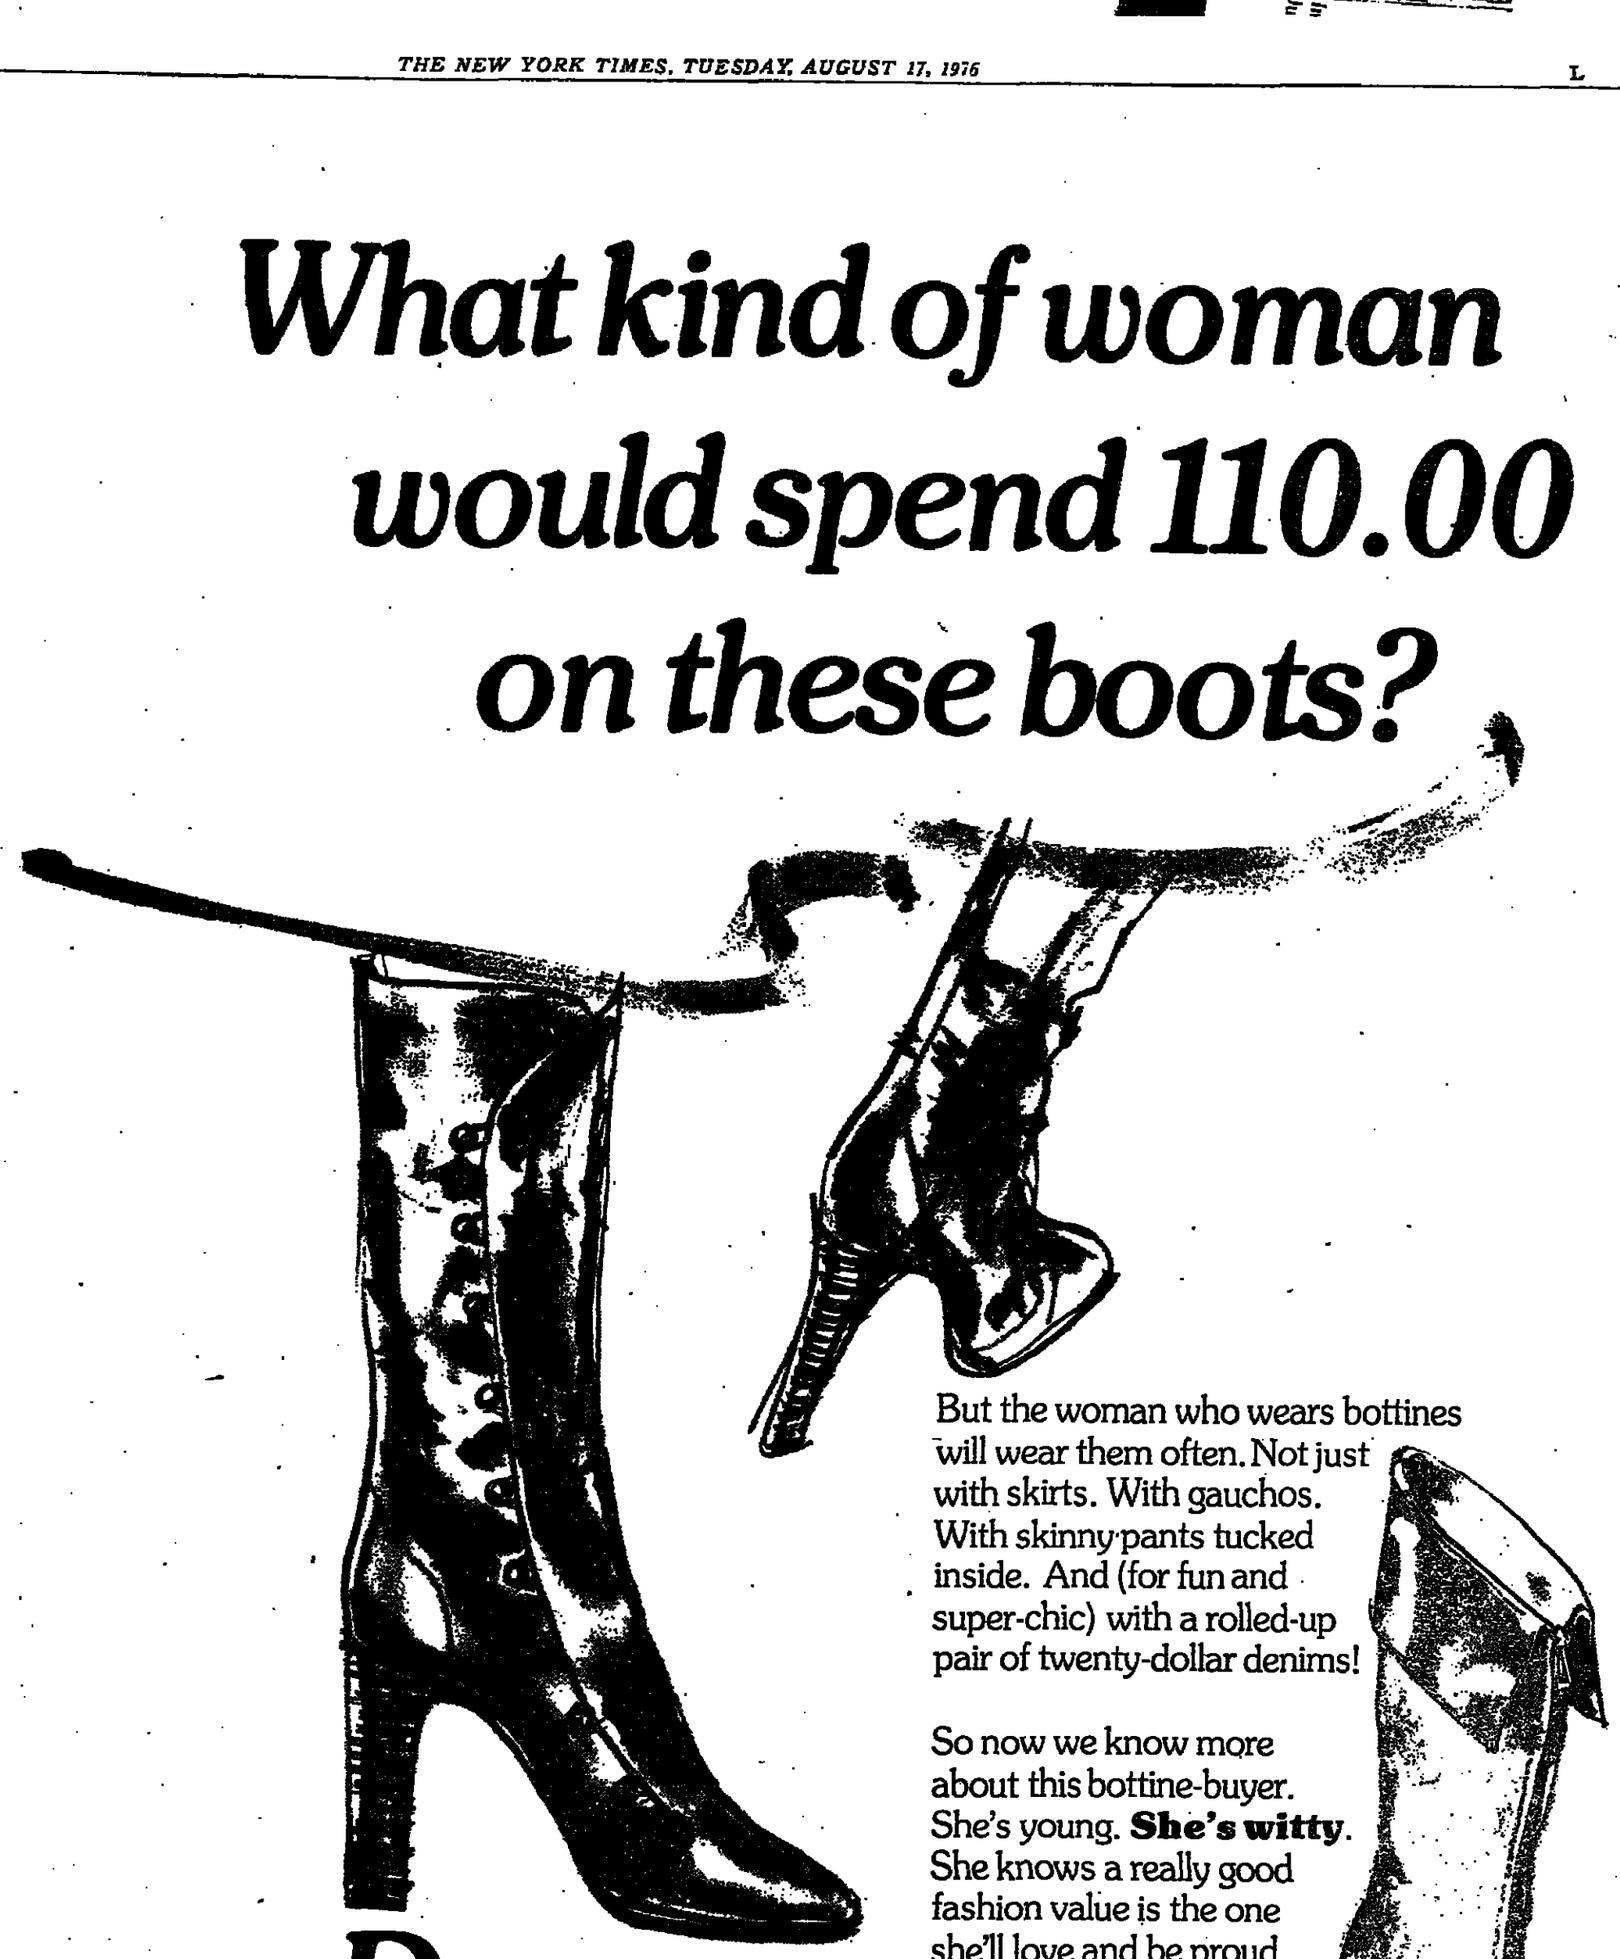
What kind of woman would spend 110.00 on these boots?



Don't leap to conclusions. Scrutinize our sketches ver-y carefully. (In the first place, such slender, high-heeled flattery deserves a better name than "boots" as in clodhoppers. We're calling them "bottines" as in French.)

Now let's check your answer. A rich woman, you say? True enough, but not necessarily rich as in Long Green. Rich as in imagination, fashion know-how.

Because these beauties, by designer Margaret Jerrold, have more going for them than just superb leather and superior workmanship. That you take for granted at a price like this.

Ms. Jerrold's bottines have a romantic, Victorian aura. Can't you picture these handsome ones being handed down from a hansom cab? That's using your imagination.

And won't they be perfect for the romantic, full-skirted silhouettes we've been hearing about? That's using your fashion know-how.

But the woman who wears bottines will wear them often. Not just with skirts. With gauchos. With skinny pants tucked inside. And (for fun and super-chic) with a rolled-up pair of twenty-dollar denims!

So now we know more about this bottine-buyer. She's young. She's witty. She knows a really good fashion value is the one she'll love and be proud of for many a day. She sounds like you? That's what we thought.

Come in and try on the trio. Our side-buttoned spats come in black or wine kidskin. The bow-tie beauty is black patent leather or brown kid. And the zippy cuff is in brown or gray kid with suede.

P.S. To paraphrase George Bernard Shaw: "She's a lady; look at her boots."

This Time, Hadassah Meeting Talks of Politics and U.S. Goals

By IRVING SPIEGEL
Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16—The primary business of Hadassah and its 350,000 members is a fusion of social and health services in Israel. But that has not kept the 2,500 delegates attending its 52d annual convention here from political activism in this Presidential election year.

Freshmen delegates from remote communities to oldtimers from the big cities are insisting on taking strong stands on domestic political issues, from support of gun-control measures to Federal child care and health insurance proposals.

From interviews, as well as the organization's position papers, it appears that many of the delegates agree with the social action positions of the Democratic Party's platform.

While emphasizing that Hadassah is "violently nonpartisan" in political matters and does not endorse candidates, Rose Matzkin, its president, said, "Our members may well be guided in their voting choices by the resolutions and positions they adopted at a convention."

Several Issues Listed

Mrs. Matzkin cited Hadassah's support of antipoverty and community action programs, revision of immigration laws, Federal aid to housing and civilian control of nuclear power as "some of the concerns of our membership."

Random interviews with delegates, meeting at the Washington Hilton Hotel, showed little concern for feminist issues such as the equal rights amendment. Instead, national health insurance, inflation control, low-cost day care centers and tax reform were among the issues that dominated. And it is these issues, many of those interviewed said, that will guide them in voting for a Presidential candidate.

Mrs. Anna Eden of Silver Springs, Md., was one of several who included "energy self-sufficiency" for the United States as high among her priorities. America needs "to be independent of Arab oil interests," said Mrs. Hortense F. Shernoff of Denver.

Most of the delegates interviewed were reluctant to express a preference for any candidate. Many said they were still "waiting for what the candidate will have to say when the campaign is under way."

The few who disclosed their choice tended to favor Jimmy Carter. Mrs. Marilyn Moosnick of Lexington, Ky., was one.

Panaceas Not Expected

"I know that Jimmy Carter's ability to lead without shackles is untried. His prejudices are as yet conjecture. But his intelligence and integrity look like the real thing."

Mrs. Lauree Weiner of Atlanta said she was "fully aware that no one candidate has a panacea for all that ails the United States." But she said that she planned to vote for Mr. Carter for his "impact on the confidence and the integrity of our government process."

Bess Katz of White Plains, who favors a Republican candidate, said she like the administration's policy of keeping "Israel strong" and the "major issues that concern and strengthening of the Bill of Rights."

To smoke or not to smoke.

That is the question.

With all the slings and arrows that have been aimed at smoking, you may well be wondering why you smoke at all.

If you don't smoke nobody is urging you to start.

But if you do smoke, you may enjoy it so much you don't want to stop.

There's the rub. Because if you do smoke, what do you smoke?

The cigarettes of the past provided a lot of smoking pleasure but they also delivered a lot of the 'tar' and nicotine the critics have aimed at.

And most of the new wave brands with low 'tar' and nicotine taste like a lot of hot air.

But now Vantage has entered the scene.

Vantage is the cigarette that succeeds in cutting down 'tar' and nicotine without compromising flavor.

While Vantage isn't the lowest 'tar' and nicotine cigarette you'll find, it probably is the lowest one you'll enjoy smoking.

If you smoke, try a pack of Vantage. And if you don't, why not show this ad to someone who does.

It might settle the question.

read by the Chief District Prosecutor, charged that on Aug. 23, 1972, one month after his assumption of power, Mr. Tanaka received the three Marubeni executives at his luxurious Tokyo housing compound.

There, the document states in formal legal language, they asked the Prime Minister to use his office, which included jurisdiction over the Transport Ministry, to assure the purchase of Lockheed L-1011 Tristar passenger jet aircraft by All Nippon Airways, primarily a domestic carrier, which transports the most passengers of any Japanese airline.

In return, the formal charge says, they promised to pay him the equivalent of $1.6 million in cash in Japanese currency.

Less than two months later, on Oct. 10, the airline, which had signed an option to purchase McDonnell Douglas DC-10 jets, reversed its decision and said it would buy the Lockheed plane.

The indictment, which mentions only the L-1011 aircraft orders, states that the bribery payments were made in four installments beginning Aug. 10, 1973, and ending March 1, 1974. Toshio Enomoto, Mr. Tanaka's secretary, is alleged to have accepted the payments for the Prime Minister at various sites in Tokyo.

The indictment of Mr. Enomoto last Monday for violations of the foreign exchange law came just hours before the three-year statute of limitations would have expired. That step had the effect of beginning legal proceedings in the case and suspending the statute.

According to legal sources, Mr. Tanaka acknowledged during questioning in the last three weeks that the payments had been made but maintained that they were legal political donations.

As the leader of the largest intraparty faction in the governing conservative political organization, Mr. Tanaka had heavy financial responsibilities to support his faction members. He resigned that leadership and his party membership on the day of his arrest.

The party, which by law must face general elections for the lower house of Parliament by next December, has yet to sort out all the scandal's ramifications.

Party leaders and members are meeting here this week in secret sessions, reportedly ransacking, to discuss the future and the possibility of political reforms.

Prime Minister Takeo Miki, Mr. Tanaka's 69-year-old successor, had no official comment on the legal actions. He has been criticized by some within his party for allowing the Lockheed investigation to proceed so far.

The reaction of the four disunited opposition parties was initially somewhat muted.

There have been reports that some of their members may also have received Lockheed funds.

The Socialists said that the scandal was not something for which Mr. Tanaka alone was responsible but was an example of "structural corruption" in Japan.

Communists Oppose Bail

The Communists said there should be no bail for Mr. Tanaka because he might then plot a cover-up with other witnesses.

The bail, if any is approved, will be set by a judge of the District Court, the same court that will hear the case. No trial date has been set but usually in such cases preliminary hearings begin within a few weeks.

The case itself is likely to go on for years until its final resolution after appeals to the High Court and then the Supreme Court.

There is no concern over finding an impartial jury since there are no jury trials in Japan. A panel of judges sits instead.

The District Court judges are appointed to life terms by Supreme Court Justices who are in turn appointed by the Prime Minister and approved by popular vote at 10-year intervals.

If he is convicted on the bribery charge and the decision is upheld, Mr. Tanaka faces a prison term of up to five years at forced labor and forfeiture of the bribe money.

For the currency regulation infraction, he could receive imprisonment at hard labor for three years and a fine of up to three times the amount of money involved.

Associated Press

Reiji Takase, center, Chief District Prosecutor, announces in Tokyo the indictment of former Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka on bribery charges in connection with purchase of Lockheed planes by Japan's largest airline. With him are Eijiro Toyoshima, left, deputy prosecutor, and Ko Kawashima, the director of the Special Investigation Bureau.

TURKEY'S VESSEL TO STAY IN AEGEAN

Spokesman Here Says It Will Continue Survey Work

Special to The New York Times

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., Aug. 16—A Turkish spokesman said today that there was "no question" that the research vessel Sismik I would continue its activities in the Aegean Sea.

The Security Council is scheduled to resume debate tomorrow on Greece's complaint against Turkey because of the search for oil by the Sismik I in proximity to Greek islands. Athens contends that the ship is violating Greek rights to the seabed.

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger was reported today to be in touch with the foreign ministers of Greece and Turkey, who are both in New York, to work out a compromise.

The Sismik I returned to the Turkish seaport of Izmir yesterday, but the Turkish spokesman, here said this was only to take supplies aboard for another mission.

Mr. Kissinger met with the Greek and Turkish ministers here on Saturday, and called on both governments to use restraint and seek a peaceful settlement of their dispute over offshore oil in the Aegean.

The quarrel over oil prospecting in the Aegean, which is three years old, has deepened the rift between Greece and Turkey that the unsolved Cyprus problem has caused.

Israeli Grocers Strike

TEL AVIV, Aug. 16 (UPI) — Angered grocers closed more than 8,000 stores in Tel Aviv, Jerusalem and Haifa today as a protest against bookkeeping, involving a new sales tax that they say only professional accountants can cope with.

Coal Miners Return to Work; U.S. Judge Drops Court Action

CHARLESTON, W. Va., Aug. 16 (AP) — Nearly all striking coal miners returned to work today, ending a month-long wildcat strike that paralyzed coalfields in the East.

Pickets kept at least one Consolidation Coal Company mine closed in southern West Virginia, however. A company official said that it was an isolated case, and that all its other mines were operating.

More than half the 100,000 striking miners had returned on Friday. Industry officials expect conditions to be normal by midweek.

Meanwhile, Federal Circuit Court Judge Emory Weidner filed an order in Abingdon, Va., freeing 213 men who had originated the strike from court action. They had been summoned to answer the charges tomorrow, and some miners had threatened to picket until the results of the hearing were known.

Judge Weidner said that he had dismissed the charges and had canceled the hearing because the men had returned to work.

The men are members of United Mine Workers Local 1759. They struck originally against the Cedar Coal Company in a local dispute and expanded the strike to other states after Federal District Judge Dennis Knapp had fined the local $50,000 for contempt of court.

The miners, who said they were protesting Federal court interference in union matters, spread the strike by sending out roving bands of pickets. Judge Knapp since had dropped his fine, imposed because the miners had ignored his back-to-work orders. The charges dismissed today were brought by Cedar Coal in connection with the expanded strike.

The four-week work stoppage appears to have had little effect on the coal market. Figures show that spot market demand and prices have not risen.

CHARLESTON, W. Va., Aug. 16 (UPI)—Most of Indiana's coal miners were off their jobs in a wildcat strike apparently unrelated to the West Virginia walkout.

Many of the Indiana mines had gone back into operation last week after West Virginia miners started returning to work, but were closed again by pickets last night and today. More than 2,000 miners were idle.

A spokesman for the AMAX Coal Company said that the strikers were "apparently protesting action by the Peabody Coal Company, which has dismissed several employees."

Rubber Pact Supported

AKRON, Aug. 16 (UPI)—A basic economic agreement, the first step toward ending the United Rubber Workers Union strike, is receiving general approval from union members. But they say they are ready to stay out "until Christmas" to get everything they want from the major tire makers.

A weekend telephone survey indicated union members were willing to approve the major elements in an "understanding" reached Friday between union and management negotiators.

The strike began April 21 at Goodrich, Goodyear, Firestone and Uniroyal plants.

Why wait up to 90 days to earn 5¼% interest

In 90 days, County Federal can pay you 5¾%!

County Federal Savings and Loan pays interest on your savings every month — on all accounts, passbook or savings certificate. So you never have to wait up to 90 days to enjoy the interest you've earned.

If you now have a passbook account that requires you to wait till the end of a quarter, County Federal suggests you consider the advantages of a County Federal 90-day Savings Certificate. You can earn 5¾% interest on your savings instead of the 5¼% (or perhaps 5%) you now receive. You don't have to tie your money up for a long period of time, because your funds are available to you without any interest penalty every 90 days. (Renewal of your certificate can be made automatic, subject to your approval.).

With a County Federal 90-day Certificate, your savings not only earn a higher rate but your interest is compounded daily. And you can draw your interest every month — or leave it in your account to earn more interest. If your savings and interest remain in your account a full year, your effective annual yield is actually 6%!

Increase the interest you now get every quarter..with a County Federal 90-day Savings Certificate. Minimum deposit — $500.

NOTE: Government regulations require a substantial interest penalty for early withdrawals from Time Savings Accounts. Interest on the amount withdrawn may not exceed the passbook rate, and interest for 90 days is forfeited.

DETROIT RECALLS POLICE OFFICERS

...thieves and punks staged some...thing close to a riot," said William J. Beckham, executive assistant to Mayor Coleman Young, who was out of the city on vacation.

At a news conference this afternoon, Mr. Beckham said the outbreak of violence "was an outright and flagrant challenge to our security and to police authority in Detroit, and we failed to meet it."

He said there was an insufficient number of officers on hand to contain the violence and that the police did not get involved inside the hall until about an hour after the first reports of trouble began circulating.

"It won't happen again," Mr. Beckham added.

The Mayor's assistant, who announced the recall of police officers and the curfew, said the officers being recalled would not go on their regular details but would be part of a special effort to rid the city of its crime problem.

Mr. Beckham then read a statement he said the Mayor had told him to give the police officials as their instructions. It said:

"I want the pimps, prostitutes, gangs and youth rovers off the streets. We're going to rid the city of them—beginning tonight."

Mr. Beckham then appealed to the parents of children under 18 to have them off the streets before 10 P.M. until further notice. He said that after that hour, police units, gang squads, plainclothesmen and four-man cruisers "will move groups of young people."

"Someone's going to get hurt, beginning tonight," he warned. "Don't let it be your child."

The regular curfew for those under 18 varies depending on a child's age. For those 17 and over, it has been unlimited. For 15- and 16-year-olds, the curfew was midnight, and for children 11 to 14, it was 10 P.M.

Police Chief Philip G. Tannian, in a joint news conference with Mr. Beckham, said letters were being sent to the laid-off officers, leaves were being canceled and other actions were being taken to put pressure on lawbreakers. He also said that security measures at the city-owned Cobo Hall would be tightened.

The recall of the officers had been scheduled for next month, and the move today will cost this financially troubled city nearly $500,000, according to budget officials. Because the city is operating on a balanced budget, several cuts may have to be made in other areas, officials indicated. But no specifics were suggested.

Mr. Beckham said that, although the recall would place a squeeze on an already tight budget, "given the problem, that's just a drop in the bucket."

The city laid off 913 police officers on July 1, including 224 who were paid in part with Federal funds under the so-called CETA program. The 224 were called back Aug. 1. With the recall today of 450 officers, the police force will number about 4,900.

Industrial Poison Experts Join Philadelphia Search

Team From Occupational Safety and Health Center to Help as Officials Expand Effort Over Entire City

By LAWRENCE K. ALTMAN
Special to The New York Times

HARRISBURG, Pa., Aug. 16—Health officials hunting the cause of the mysterious disease that has killed 25 people in Pennsylvania have broadened their investigation to include a search of Philadelphia by experts in industrial poisons.

A team including a physician expert in industrial poisons and three industrial hygienists from the National Institute of Occupational Safety and Health will join other Federal and state medical detectives in Philadelphia tomorrow.

Dr. Denis J. Lucey 3d, Pennsylvania Commissioner of Health Planning and Resources Development, said in an interview that the entry of the safety institute team resulted partly from a meeting in which he participated at the Center for Disease Control in Atlanta last Friday. The institute is a unit of the Center for Disease Control, which in turn is a unit of the United States Public Health Service.

The Friday meeting was held to review the data collected up to that point in the investigation. Experts who attended urged that health officials undertake a more formal and intensive investigation for industrial and other poisons, Dr. Lucey said.

Entire City Included

Referring to the safety institute, Dr. Lucey said, "There's no question that they are going to look at the entire city of Philadelphia."

Philadelphia's 1.9 million inhabitants make it the country's fourth largest city.

Edward Baier, deputy director of the institute, quoted in a telephone interview from his office in Rockville, Md., that epidemiologists had been unable to pinpoint the common source of exposure and identify a suspect agent.

As a result, he said: "We don't know where to look so we'll begin very broadly and take a fresh look. We'll be another pair of eyes and brains going but because our orientation is different, we're hoping we can turn up something new."

Mr. Baier said that the team would look first at the filters, sprays and other aspects of the ventilation systems in several of the city's hotels. The investigators will look at the intake systems, prevailing wind directions and other factors so that laboratory technicians might later identify a possible industrial toxin as a cause.

However, Mr. Baier pointed out that toxicologists know of very few chemicals that can produce the type of delayed symptoms experienced by members of the American Legion who became ill after attending a state convention in Philadelphia July 21 to 24.

On the institute team are Dr. Shiro Tanaka and three industrial hygienists, William Shoemaker, Denny Dobbin and Wesley Straub.

Dr. Lucey said that the institute team would "look for any gaps and loopholes that might have been omitted" by another team of environmental experts from the Center for Disease Control who have been working in Philadelphia during the two weeks since the outbreak was discovered.

Dr. Lucey also said that the institute team would "bring in that special quality from experience because they are people who have investigated industrial accidents such as air, water and pollution incidents. They may recognize something unusual in the shape of a building or a location or the weather patterns in the area, or something else that rings an experiential bell," he added.

Dr. Lucey said that there was air pollution and an inversion factor during the American Legion convention.

Sometimes, Dr. Lucey said, "a batch of individuals can be more severely affected" than the general population from air pollution or unusual weather conditions. He said that although large groups had been affected by air pollution incidents over wide areas in London and Donora, Pa., for example, sometimes there are "peculiarities of air currents or of what the environmentalists call microclimate conditions" in which groups of people with chronic diseases such as heart conditions are particularly affected.

Sewer and Subway Study

As a result of a quick round-trip he made to Philadelphia, Dr. Lucey said, he hoped the institute team would look at the sewer and subway construction on Broad Street and other physical changes near the Bellevue Stratford Hotel.

On Saturday, health officials added the name of the Bellevue Stratford Hotel, the headquarters hotel for the Legion convention, to a new set of criteria for being included as a case of the mysterious disease.

One of those included under the new definition is an unidentified magician who attended a magician's convention on July 21 and who subsequently became sick although he did not seek medical attention. The magician did not stay at the Bellevue Stratford Hotel but he did enter it, Dr. Lucey said.

Epidemiologists are calling people who registered at the Bellevue Stratford and at other Philadelphia hotels during the two weeks before and after the Legion convention. The purpose is to detect if these people might also have experienced the disease.

"That has not proven anything yet," Morton Rosen, Pennsylvania deputy secretary of health, said in an interview.

In other developments today, Dr. Lucey said that Federal epidemiologists were designing a third questionnaire for the persons who had survived or were still sick with the mysterious disease. The epidemiologists are also planning to take additional blood samples from those who have recovered from the disease, their family members and others who attended the convention but did not become ill.

Just after the outbreak was discovered, Dr. Jay Satz, who heads the state's virology laboratory, said that he was undertaking such tests and that results would be forthcoming in about a week. Health officials said they did not know the results of those tests when asked today.

Yesterday, pathologists performed an autopsy on a woman who became the 25th fatality in the outbreak. The doctors took extra care not to contaminate her tissues with metals. This was an effort to avoid a flaw that invalidated tests last week for nickel carbonyl, a highly toxic substance that produces symptoms similar to those seen in the mysterious disease.

Those tests measured exceedingly high nickel levels in tissues from legionnaires and from a victim of a unrelated cause of death. The doctors who made the tests said it looked as if all the tissues had been contaminated, probably through the use of nickel-bearing metals when cutting.

At the autopsy yesterday, doctors used glass and plastic instruments. The tissues are being sent to Dr. F. William Sunderman Jr., whose laboratory is doing the nickel tests at the University of Connecticut Medical School.

Mystery Disease Investigators Turn Bellevue Stratford Hotel Into Research Area

By BOYCE RENSBERGER
Special to The New York Times

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 16—On a high ledge above the registration desk at the Bellevue Stratford Hotel, a medical epidemiologist stands, peering into a dark ventilation shaft. He leans in, carefully scrapes out black dust and puts it into a plastic bag. Then he photographs the gaping hole in the wall where the grille has been removed.

On the floor of the ornate lobby, employees try to go about their jobs, but a group of bellmen keep glancing up at the man.

"If it's up there, we're dead," one of the bellmen says.

"What do you mean?" another says. "I've been working under that thing every day and I feel fine."

Similar scenes occur several times a day at the Bellevue Stratford and at other Philadelphia hotels as investigators press their search for whatever it was that has killed 25 Pennsylvanians who either attended or had some contact with an American Legion convention here July 21-24.

While other hotels are included, and while the search is being broadened to include all of the city, the Bellevue Stratford is a focus in the investigation. Nearly all of the 170 cases of the mysterious illness that are now listed involve people who either stayed at that hotel or visited it. There are a handful of cases for which there is no established link to the Bellevue Stratford, but information on them is incomplete.

Despite analysis of such materials as the dust gathered from the ventilation shaft and fluids and tissues from living and dead victims, there has still been no hint of any possible cause of the illness. Health officials have conceded that it could be a very long time before the mystery is solved—if it ever is.

"I'm an optimist and I would like to believe we will find the answer," said Dr. Lewis Polk, Philadelphia Health Commissioner. "But as each day goes by and we don't get any new leads, it becomes a possibility that we may never find it."

Fatal outbreaks of various sorts have occurred several times in recent years and, despite intensive efforts, remained mysteries. Mindful that the so-called "legionnaire's disease" case could be equally elusive, investigators have, from the beginning, set aside portions of every sample to be kept in storage for the day when a new analytic method or theory might be developed.

The death late Saturday of the 64-year-old wife of a convention delegate — the 25th fatality as counted under the revised definition of the disease — did provide investigators with a new opportunity for testing. The woman, who had been hospitalized and on the critical list for several days, was the first fatality in nearly a week.

More Stress on Details

Although the sense of urgency that once had investigators working round the clock has abated and most of the researchers are now working normal hours, a number of procedures are being repeated with more care and with more attention to detail.

One procedure now being used is a more intensive analysis of the activities of victims during their stay in Philadelphia. Initially victims were interviewed, usually by police detectives, about such things as where they stayed, where and what they ate and where they went for entertainment. Now epidemiologists are asking victims who can to return to the Bellevue Stratford to re-enact their movements minute by minute.

"We're asking them to start at the entrance where they first went in and walk through the same halls and rooms exactly as they did during the convention," said Dr. David Sencell, Philadelphia's deputy health commissioner. A medical epidemiologist will walk along with them and look for whatever he thinks might be relevant. We want to know what bed he slept in, where and when they went to the bathroom—everything in as much detail as possible."

Although the earlier interviews produced a number of patterns common to some victims, nothing more specific than being in the hotel was common to all. Yet no one has found evidence of anything hazardous in the hotel that could have caused the disease.

Investigators have checked all the ventilating and air-conditioning systems, the kitchens, the fixtures and furnishings of the rooms, the chemicals used by the maids and cleaning crews and a number of other things. They have called most of the recent guests, legionnaires or not, to see whether, for example, a traveling salesman might have brought in samples of some chemical. They have examined the hotel's books for evidence of materials purchased for use in the hotel.

Sprayed Surfaces Tested

Earlier, researchers checked the pesticides used by exterminators in the hotel. Now, on the possibility that the cause was not the raw pesticide but a combination of the pesticide with something it was sprayed on, such as paint or floor wax, investigators are going around with exterminators as they work taking samples of the newly sprayed surfaces.

The theory, one of dozens, is that the sprayed surface might give off fumes until it dried, after which there would be no trace of the reaction product.

Many of the same tests are being made at a number of other hotels where legionnaires stayed, such as the Warwick, the Benjamin Franklin and the Holiday Inn. Investigations are also under way at hotels in town and on the outskirts where no legionnaires stayed.

The idea is to get comparative data, if, for example, a substance or microbe from the Bellevue Stratford looked suspicious, it might be ruled out if tests showed the same substance or microbe were in hotels where no disease had occurred.

Despite the failure to find anything questionable about the Bellevue Stratford, the hotel continues to be regarded as suspicious by some members of the public.

One couple passing by on the sidewalk Saturday suddenly glanced up and read the name of the hotel over the entrance. They studied the building for a moment and then veered toward the curb so as to walk as far away from the door as possible.

William Chadwick, managing director of the Bellevue Stratford, said that adverse publicity had affected the hotel's business.

"There has been definite harm done to the hotel and to Philadelphia," Mr. Chadwick said. "They're pointing at the hotel and there is no reason to do that."

He said that about 8,500 people had registered at the hotel since Aug. 1. Mr. Chadwick said this was about normal for the season but that many more guests had been expected in the Bicentennial year.

Four blocks south of the Bellevue Stratford, on South Broad Street, is the nerve center of the Philadelphia investigative operation. Other centers of activity are in the state capital at Harrisburg and in Atlanta at the Federal Center for Disease Control.

In a large room on the ground floor of the city's health department building, dozens of investigators from state and local health departments, detectives from the Philadelphia police force and epidemiologists from Atlanta work a bank of telephones, interviewing victims, questioning experts all over the country and coordinating the investigators in the hotels and victims' homes.

On a large board are the names and pertinent details of all the victims. Almost every day a new name or two is added to the list, virtually all the additions reflecting not new illnesses but the delayed reporting of a sickness that began much earlier. The vast bulk of illnesses began in the period between the end of the convention on July 24 and Aug. 1. Since then the number of new onsets of illness has tapered off almost to zero.

In the corner of what could be called the investigations war room is a computer terminal linked to others in Harrisburg and Atlanta. It is exchanging data with the other centers almost continuously. The main data now are from the thousands of questionnaires administered to all legionnaires who attended the convention. The machines are looking for patterns of background or activity that might correlate with the disease.

Again, nothing significant has emerged.

BOARD ACCEPTS CUTS BY BEAME

Presses Him to Obtain New Savings by Agencies

By STEVEN R. WEISMAN

The State Emergency Financial Control Board accepted some of Mayor Beame's latest cost reductions yesterday, deferred the acceptance of some others, and pressed him to produce spending plans for the independent agencies outside his jurisdiction.

At an afternoon meeting, the control board staff raised a series of specific objections to the plan for $85 million in "standby" spending reductions that the city was pledging to put into effect should its first $50 million in cuts prove insufficient.

In response, Governor Carey and the other members of the seven-member panel that oversees the city's fiscal affairs called on Mr. Beame to furnish more detailed outlines of these contingency cuts by Oct. 15.

Behind the sparring over the "standby" reductions lay a long-simmering controversy that has beset the Mayor's relations with the control board since the spring.

'Slippage' at Issue

The focus of that controversy is the question of how much "slippage" exists in the city's program of harsh new stringencies designed to keep its budget in balance.

A contention by control board staff members that there has been much "slippage"—that is, spending cuts that have failed to produce the savings projected—led to the board's demand for the newest cuts.

Mayor Beame, contending that there is less "slippage" than the control board fears, transmitted the cuts a few weeks ago. These comprised the $50 million in immediate savings—half of them in new revenues—and $85 million in "standby" reductions that Mr. Beame said would lead to the layoffs of 4,000 municipal employees.

According to aides on both sides, control board staff people felt 4,000 layoffs were unnecessary to achieve the second round of reductions and that Mr. Beame was not coming up with a serious response.

At the meeting, over which Governor Carey personally presided, the Mayor gave a "personal defense" of the contingency cuts, according to Stephen Berger, the control board's executive director.

First Deputy Mayor John E. Zuccotti added that, if new cuts actually proved to be necessary later in the year, the city might seek alternatives, but that these were the cuts that would be made now if it proved necessary.

The control board generally accepted the city's program of $50 million in immediate cuts, but deferred acceptance of a $4 million cut in the city's subsidy to the New York City Transit Authority, pending the Transit Authority's submission of a program of its own showing how it would balance its own budget.

No Hard Information

Finally, the control board in effect said it had no hard information showing how the various independent agencies—particularly the Health and Hospital Corporation and the Transit Authority—intended to keep their budgets in balance.

"We need more than a two-page series of numbers," Mr. Berger said. We need management information, timetables, and specific detail."

He said the agencies had been asked to submit details for their own budgets by the beginning of September, noting that the need for such information was especially critical for the hospitals corporation, which had earlier submitted a program of reductions that the board's staff found faulty, and whose financial picture was clouded by the settlement of the four-day hospital strike two weeks ago.

Judge Is Asked to Lift His Gag Order

By DENA KLEIMAN

A defense lawyer at the murder trial of a member of a Harlem mosque yesterday asked the presiding judge to vacate his order prohibiting attorneys from discussing the case with the press.

In a two-hour session of oral argument, the lawyer, James Carroll told Justice Martin Evans of State Supreme Court that the ruling violated his constitutional right to free speech as well as the public's right to know.

Justice Evans, who quizzed Mr. Carroll with hypothetical examples of the kinds of restrictions a judge should be able to place on an attorney's conduct during a trial, reserved decision on the motion.

While a recent United States Court ruling made it clear that, in general, the court would not tolerate gag orders placed on the press in criminal trials, the law on this other kind of gag order—one that affects participants—is less clear.

Justice Evans's ruling is the seventh such order this year, according to the Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press. There were two such orders in 1967. By 1974 there were 11, and last year, there were 18.

At a meeting last Wednesday, the American Bar Association adopted a resolution that would require judges to give the press and the public warning and an explanation before issuing such an order. Although under no obligation to do so, judges often give great weight to such resolutions.

Justice Evans issued his order at the trial's outset last Aug. 2. At first he refused to discuss any aspect of the case with the press, but later said that he had imposed the order because he was concerned that the lawyers would use the press as a means to influence the jury. He said that while jurors are directed not to read or listen to press reports of the trial, sometimes they "inadvertently" do.

The case before Justice Evans involves the murder of a policeman at Muhammad's Mosque No. 7 in April 1972 during a melee and gun battle after the police had been summoned to the mosque by an emergency call.

Lewis 17X Dupree, 36 years old, who at the time was a teacher and dean at the mosque, has been charged with the slaying of Police Officer Phillip Cardillo, 31.

Defendant Denies Charge

James Harmon, the assistant district attorney in charge of the case, has said that Mr. Dupree took away Officer Cardillo's gun and shot him with it.

The defense has contended that Mr. Dupree is not guilty and that during the trial it would point out who Officer Cardillo's killer really was.

"All we ask is that the court vacate the gag order," Mr. Carroll said.

"Is your client prejudiced by the order?" Justice Evans asked.

"The public is prejudiced," Mr. Carroll said.

Mr. Carroll contended that the judge's order violates the First Amendment. And because it does, he said, the issue now is not whether the ruling is in violation of the defendant's rights but whether there had been "a clear and imminent danger" that the defendant's rights would be violated without the ruling.

Mr. Harmon, who spoke only briefly, said that he supported the judge's ruling.

"Even if the order did not exist, we would not engage in trial by the press," Mr. Harmon said. "Our forum is 16 free citizens who have come here to judge this case."

The trial, at 100 Centre Street, is scheduled to continue tomorrow and is expected to last through October.

100 Faulty Firearms Stolen From National Guard Base

DANVERS, Mass. Aug. 16 (AP)—More than 100 firearms—all inoperable—were stolen from the National Guard armory here, it was discovered today.

Seven M-60 machine guns, 93 M-16 semi-automatic rifles and a .45-caliber pistol, were taken in the burglary, according to Arthur Montuori, special agent in charge of the Boston office of the United States Treasury's Division of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

All of the firearms were without firing pins, said State Police Lieut. Col. John R. O'Donovan. The firing pins were stored separately, he said.

Mayor Beame told the delegates he hoped they would "get to see some of the things which make New York City great."

"Enjoy it; and we need the money," he said.

Governor Carey, who also attended this morning's session, told the organization's members that "we must never let the passage of years diminish our commitments to those who sacrificed in our name."

By Friday, when the convention ends, the 77-year-old service organization, formed after the Spanish-American war, will have passed more than 300 resolutions dealing with defense, veterans' benefits, foreign relations, flag display, national holidays and other matters.

Thomas C. Walker, the organization's commander in chief, who flew P-51 fighter planes in the South Pacific in World War II and who now lives in New London, Conn., said the desire to join the rganization, which has 1.8 million members throughout the world, had come to him slowly.

"It didn't hit me at first," he said, "although I lost a lot of good friends in combat and crashes. When I came back, though, I felt lucky to come through in one piece. Some of them came back in worse shape, or didn't come back at all. I felt I owed them something."

REGENTS BID STATE ADD TO CITY U. AID

"no new taxes are needed for implementation of the plan as now proposed."

The Regents also said state financing for private institutions should be based on costs per student at public institutions, and that tuition levels at public institutions should depend on the costs of instruction.

This was explained as an effort to narrow "the wide discrepancy in the ways in which State University, City University, and the private colleges use tuition to support the instructional program and new construction."

"Rational measures need to be applied so that students in each of these sectors will not be unfairly burdened," a Regents statement issued with the document said.

Citing an expected period of declining college enrollment through 1995, which, the Regents said, implied a "redefinition of mission" by colleges to serve more adult and fewer undergraduate needs, the plan suggested that "it may be more desirable to use public funds to support students than it is during an era of expansion; it imposes an automatic kind of accountability on all institutions and requires them to compete on their merits."

Thus, it said that to compensate for increases in tuition, the state should increase the maximum award under the Tuition Assistance Program from $1,500 to $1,700 in 1977. It said an appropriation of $229 million would be required for fiscal 1977, $30.9 million more than the fiscal 1976 figure.

The Tuition Assistance Program would become the single source of state funds allocated for inability to pay but "merit" programs such as the Regents scholarships would continue. A new graduate fellowship program that would offer 800 Regents fellowships annually to first-time doctoral students was also proposed.

The award would be for four years and cover tuition or $3,000, whichever is less, plus a $2,500 annual stipend for living expenses.

However, while stressing the need to reaffirm a "tradition of excellence in doctoral study in the state," the Regents noted that by 1990, 60,000 Ph.D.'s in the humanities and 90,000 scientists and engineers with Ph.D.'s would have had to find careers outside of college teaching and other traditional research and development areas.

They recommended public support of selected programs, which would be concentrated in fewer institutions.

Equity in Financing Urged

The Regents said they saw "no justication for differences in funding" that put the burden for financing programs for economically and educationally disadvantaged students "unevenly on the various public and independent institutions operating them," and called for "greater equity" in their financing.

An increase in enrollment in these "opportunity" programs to 37,000 by 1980, from the current level of 33,000, was also proposed.

In view of the proposed decrease in the college-age population, the Regents said a long-term goal should be set to provide state financial aid to part-time students if funds became available.

Noting that in 1977 alone more than 50,000 fewer students were expected to enroll in colleges in the state, the plan said that at present, state and independent colleges "are too optimistic" in viewing their own enrollment prospects and that they should "temper their expectations or face unexpected declines."

"That is the critical issue of th 1970's and the 1980's," Mr. Hollander said.

The public hearing Sept. 1 is scheduled for 10 A.M. at the Donnell Library Center Building, 20 West 53d Street.

The airline that flies to more of the world also flies to more of Europe.

Pan Am flies direct to more cities in the world from the U.S. than any other airline.

And Europe being a large part of the world, we also fly to more of its cities than any other U.S. airline.

And to many cities in Europe many times each day from Pan Am's Worldport™ terminal at JFK.

For example, you can fly with us to London at 10:00 a.m., 7:00 p.m., or 9:00 p.m.

To Frankfurt at 6:00 p.m., 7:00 p.m., or 8:45 p.m.

To Copenhagen daily at 6:00 p.m. To Rome daily at 8:30 p.m. To Amsterdam daily at 9:00 p.m. Or to Brussels daily at 10:00 a.m.

Whichever of these times or cities you choose, you'll fly aboard a 747. It's the only plane we schedule across the North Atlantic.

On many of our 747s we offer first class passengers a chance to dine in our upper-deck dining room. At a table like you would in a fine restaurant. And like in a fine restaurant, it's best to reserve a table. (You should reserve a table when you reserve your flight.)

Besides first class and regular economy fares, we offer 14/21-day fares, 22/45-day fares, and 22/45-day Budget Fares.

Budget Fares can save you about 50% over regular round trip economy fares. (Because these fares are so low, there are various restrictions and conditions which your travel agent can explain easier than we can do here.)

The result of all those fares? Well, if you're vacationing on a tight budget we can help loosen your belt a little.

And we can help keep it loosened while you're there. With Pan Am's Two-Weekers, Three-Weekers, and London Showtime tours. Both escorted or unescorted are available. You can read about them in our Europe tour book, PAH 001.

In September, we'll offer a selection of One-Weekers as well. You can read about those in our One-Weeker tour book, PAH 004. At that time, we'll also be lowering our fares. Including the ones that were already low to begin with.

Cadets' Lawyers Call for Return Of Men Held Guilty of Cheating

Civilian and military lawyers representing cadets accused of cheating at the United States Military Academy at West Point urged the United States Court of Military Appeals in Washington yesterday to reinstate those cadets who had been found guilty of violating the honor code.

The only penalty for such a violation is separation from the Academy, either through resignation or expulsion. Twelve cadets have resigned so far, rather than take their cases to the officer boards at West Point that have judged the matter.

But yesterday, five Army captains and three civilian lawyers representing the 199 cadets from last year's junior class who have been implicated in the cheating scandal asked the three-member civilian military appeals court to halt the Academy's proceedings against the accused cadets.

'A Kangaroo Court'

"The Academy's proceedings are actually a court-martial in disguise," Henry Rothblatt, a New York lawyer, told the three judges, A. B. Fletcher Jr., William H. Cook and Matthew J. Perry. "The officer boards are, in effect, a kangaroo court."

Mr. Rothblatt and the other defense lawyers also charged that the Academy had been using the system of officer boards to circumvent a review of cases by the Court of Military Appeals.

This charge was denied by Col. Richard J. Bednar of Omaha, Neb., the Army's chief litigation officer. But he contended that the military appeals court had no jurisdiction over the matter.

Colonel Bednar told Chief Judge Fletcher that his court did not have the authority to adjudicate the cheating cases because they were an "administrative matter and not criminal."

His contention was immediately challenged by Michael T. Rose, a former Air Force lawyer who is coordinating the cadets' defense. Mr. Rose said that expulsion from the Academy was a "criminal sanction" that would affect the future lives of cadets, both professionally and personally.

Another defense lawyer, Capt. James D. Earl of Ridgefield, Conn., then asked Judge Fletcher to reinstate the cadets who had been found guilty and thus "the slate [would be] wiped clean."

His request drew a heated response from the judge.

"What you suggest shocks my conscience," Judge Fletcher said. "These cadets will lead our Army in the field in the next 20 years."

30 Cadets in Courtroom

None of the judges on the bench gave any indication yesterday when they would deliver a ruling on the cases. During yesterday's proceedings, about 30 cadets, all in West Point uniforms, sat fidgeting in the back of the courtroom.

The two-hour hearing marked the first legal step concerning the cheating candal, although the House of Representatives has held some hearings on the matter.

More than 180 members of the Senate and the House have asked the Secretary of the Army, Martin R. Hoffmann, to delay or prevent expulsion of cadets until next month, when the corps of cadets might vote for a change in the honor system. Secretary Hoffmann has made no decision.

Meanwhile, officer boards at West Point yesterday sustained charges against three more cadets and cleared two more, raising the number of those found guilty to 77 and of those cleared to 36. Nineteen cases have been dismissed before reaching the boards.

Fire Losses Up Slightly

Fire losses in the United States were up only 1.2 percent during the first six months of 1976 while the average annual increases from 1972 to 1975 had been nearly 16 percent, the Insurance Information Institute has reported, according to the Associated Press. Total fire losses for the first half of this year were $1.869 billion, according to the industry organization.

MONDALE DERIDES REPUBLICAN FIGHT

Says Ford-Reagan Contest Is a Futile Exercise

By PAUL DELANEY

LAS VEGAS, Nev., Aug. 16—Senator Walter F. Mondale said today that the controversy between President Ford and Ronald Reagan was futile because the Democrats would win in November.

"The Republicans gave us two Presidents and three Vice Presidents with only one election, and that's never been done before," the Democratic Vice-Presidential nominee told friendly audiences of labor members here and in Bal Harbour, Fla., today and in Black Mountain, N.C., yesterday.

"There are a lot of subtleties to the Republican convention," the Minnesota Senator remarked.

Mr. Reagan has picked a Vice President he intends to dump and Mr. Ford has dumped the President he might pick, Mr. Mondale said.

"But it doesn't make any difference, because the next President will be Jimmy Carter," he added.

Mr. Mondale received the most enthusiastic reception so far on his tour from the meeting of the American Federation of Teachers in Bal Harbour, as he and Albert Shanker, president of the union, stood with clasped hands raised above their heads.

The Senator was also warmly received at a breakfast this morning by Dade County Democrats and yesterday at a regional training session of United Automobile Workers at Black Mountain.

Mr. Mondale accused President Ford of vetoing five major bills that would have aided education.

He said, jokingly, that a leaf had flown in a window of the White House "the other day, and he vetoed it before it could fly out."

The Democratic nominee also said that President Ford reminded him of a miser who went to heaven and was stopped at the gate by St. Peter and asked what good had he done. The miser said that he had given a nickel to an old lady in 1919 and another nickel to a crippled newsboy in 1932. The miser was not admitted to Heaven and St. Peter gave him his nickels back.

"In November, I propose we give them their dime back," Mr. Mondale said to the cheer and applause of the teachers.

CARTER IS BRIEFED BY 16 SPECIALISTS

Topics Include Education and Social Security

By LINDA CHARLTON
Special to The New York Times

PLAINS, Ga., Aug. 16—As the Republicans battled in Kansas City, Jimmy Carter held an afternoon seminar on domestic programs here today with a group of 16 experts in areas ranging from higher education to Social Security.

The briefing was the first of a series of three planned for this week. Energy policy will be the subject tomorrow, and on Wednesday a third group of experts will arrive by bus from Atlanta for an afternoon devoted to international economics.

Mr. Carter, at a news conference held after the four-and-one-half-hour session, said there was general agreement that the best way to approach social programs was to consider them "as an entity, and to lay down long-range purposes or goals," in terms of what can be hoped to be achieved within set periods of time and the net costs.

The Democratic Presidential candidate, who is known to place a high priority on Government reorganization, said that there was also general agreement within the meeting that any improvement in social programs "will have to be combined with reorganization of the structure of Government." The present "bureaucratic mess," he said, presents nearly insuperable obstacles to change.

He reiterated his goal, which he said the participants shared of removing from the welfare rolls those persons who are able to work, and dealing with them through a separate system of training and job placement, and of dealing with the "working poor" outside the welfare system as well.

Before the November election, Mr. Carter said, he intends to spell out his proposed "rough allocations" of priorities and funds within this area. He was asked about Republican charges that his proposed reforms would cost the taxpayers $200 million annually. He smiled and said, "It's not true," adding that there was agreement in today's discussion that the desired goals could be met within his stated budgetary "parameters" of keeping Federal spending at its present level of about 20 percent of the gross national product.

Among those attending the meeting were Joseph D. Duffey, the liberal Democrat who is Mr. Carter's associate issues director for the campaign; Marion Wright Edelman of the Children's Defense Fund; William Friday, head of the education task force and president of the University of North Carolina, and Wilson Riles, superintendent of public schools for California.

Other participants in today's briefing were: Robert Ball, a former commissioner of the Social Security Administration, and a senior scholar at the National Academy of Sciences; John Carr, the coordinator for urban issues of the United States Catholic Conference, and Sam Halperin, the director of the Institute for Educational Leadership of George Washington University.

Also participating were Ruth Hanft, a professor at Dartmouth College and a member of the National Academy of Sciences Institute of Medicine; Tom Joe, of Lewin & Associates, Inc., a consulting firm for social programs; Dr. David Kindig, the director of Montefiore Hospital, New York City; Mary Lewis, a professor at Catholic University in Washington, D.C., and Dr. Ray Marshall, the president of the National Rural Center and a professor at the University of Texas.

Other participants were John Palmer of the Brookings Institution and a former Assistant Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare; James Parham, the commissioner of the Department of Human Resources of the State of Georgia, and James Storey, a senior staff analyst for the United States Senate Budget Committee. Ed Weaver, the executive director of the American Public Welfare Association, sent a representative. Mary King, of the Carter-Mondale campaign staff, also participated.

This is the second series of such briefings for Mr. Carter. Earlier this month sessins were held on three succeeding days on economics, foreign policy and intelligence.

Excerpts From Speeches at the Convention by Rockefeller, Goldwater and B

Following are excerpts from the transcripts of speeches to the Republican National Convention by Vice President Rockefeller and Senator Barry Goldwater of Arizona, as recorded by The New York Times, and from the prepared text of the keynote address by Senator Howard H. Baker Jr., of Tennessee:

Rockefeller Address

Unaccustomed as I am to being a noncandidate, I greet you tonight as the only noncandidate I know on this program. This is a strange role for me. I've tried to get your nomination for 16 years. I've waged primary fights, platform battles, and convention contests, and I've enjoyed it.

I hope it has helped this party and more particularly helped this America, but I claim no record for my longtime effort. The Olympic honors for the Republican Presidential marathon remain with our good friend Harold Stassen. Harold, come out, come out. Where are you?

Now one of our pundits commented on my futile quest for the nomination, referring to me as always the Republican bridesmaid but never the bride. Now that's just not me, ladies and gentlemen. I've always wanted to be the groom. But somehow I never could get to the church on time.

Being a noncandidate, however, does not mean that I'm not concerned. I am concerned. I'm concerned about this Republican Party. I'm concerned about America. I'm concerned about equal opportunity for all America. I'm concerned with a world in which human dignity is recognized and fostered.

And I'm also concerned, that Americans do not understand or appreciate the contributions of President Ford and his Administration to this nation and the world.

Gerry Ford took the Presidency in the worst constitutional crisis this country had since the Civil War. By calm, deliberate and open action, and by sheer guts, he kept this nation from being torn apart at the seams. And if it took a football player who played center without a helmet to pull us through, I say, thank God we've had him to lead the team.

Use of the Veto

My friends, my friends, the easiest—my friends, thank you—I want to be sure we're all friends—the easiest thing a President can do with an appropriation bill is to sign it.

Gerry Ford had the intelligence and the courage to say "no." To use, ladies and gentlemen, to use the veto as the constitutional fathers intended it, to protect the interests of the majority, all of the people against the special interests of the pressure groups.

And contrary to what you've heard out of Madison Square Garden, the Ford Administration not only held down inflation, but raised the number of jobs in this country to its all-time high. Ladies and gentlemen, these are real jobs, not make work.

Gerry Ford took office when we were involved in the war the Democrats produced. This had not only cost dearly in lives in the fighting in Southeast Asia but divided our people at home. It was a Republican Administration that got us out of the Vietnam problem.

And it was President Ford who took the firm action thereafter that restored the respect of friends and allies and potential foes as well throughout the world. And as we Baptists would say, "Brothers and sisters, that took some doing."

Shrinking Not Growing

This nation needs a strong and vigorous two-party system. Frankly, this Republican Party of ours has been shrinking not growing, and it's time to face up to this reality. We know we can have a broad-based appeal, we have won four out of the last seven Presidential elections, but we did it with candidates and with campaigns that appealed to the broad spectrum of the American populace—not a narrow few.

This Republican Party can grow. The nation requires it to do so. It must expand, gain adherents and not repel them. We must reach out to all groups in our society, more regions of this land. Every problem America faces today is an opportunity and at no period in history have the opportunities been greater than they are today.

If we but have the vision and the courage to grasp them, we can build an America of opportunity for all people to achieve what their capacity and talent and their visions can produce. If the Republican Party is to be a viable potential political force, we must seize these opportunities by offering a new spirit of unity and vigorous programs from this Republican convention.

The Republican Party needs this and more importantly the nation needs it. If you don't believe me, read the Democratic platform, with its pussyfooting prose. Or try to figure out where the Democratic candidate stands on the issues. You know he really belongs on that TV program called "What's My Line?" Here's a fellow that one time calls himself a Georgia 'redneck' and just last week in Washington at Ralph Nader's shindig, believe it or not he tried to pass himself off as one of the Nader-day saints.

My message to all Republicans is let's expose the Democrat doubletalk. Let's tell the people like it is. Let's give 'em straight talk, the facts. Let's tell them what we have done, what we will do and what it will mean to every American now and in the future.

Let's carry to the people an imaginative, a compassionate, a realistic and a sound program for these difficult but exciting years ahead. Let's do it here and now. And we're going to win a great victory in November. Thank you very much.

Goldwater Address

As we meet here tonight, one matter should be considered paramount to all our deliberations. And that matter is our party's position as the national defender of individual liberty.

What is it that we believe in? We believe in and adhere to the Constitution of the United States. We believe in and engage in free enterprise. We believe in and practice the proven truth that only through spiritual, economic and military strength can we preserve the peace that we now have.

Our enemies are deaf to the whining of weak but they hear loud and clear the voice of strength. So I wish to speak to you tonight not so much as a Republican concerned about the direction of his party but as an American concerned about the destiny of his country—for we are all Americans and we are all Republicans and what we do here in convention assembled will stretch far beyond ourselves, far beyond this year and our party.

Now we are told, depend on one man. Depend on Mr. Carter. And I say why. Why should you or I or any of us depend on any one man to protect and preserve what is so much larger than any one man, namely freedom and all that goes with it. And all that we have fought for and all that we believe in.

Why must all this depend on Mr. Carter? I ask the question and I will admit to being a little afraid. I know the answer. It doesn't depend on him. It depends on us — on all of us Americans. Ours is a country of all people. Not one person. But I say I'm afraid. Let me tell you why. For a moment or two, I would like to discuss with you what the alternatives to our approach mean.

Allow me then to move Mr. Carter across the screen slowly. Mr. Carter is the man who won a string of primary victories by ranting against Washington. Promising to cut the cost of government and balance the national budget. But Mr. Carter is also the man who endorsed wholeheartedly a Democrat platform which would have enacted add $125 billion to the annual cost of government. And I might add now he finds that his campaign is short $150,000.

Quotes Carter on Taxes

Mr. Carter is the man who told the Democrat convention that our tax system was a disgrace to the human race. But, Mr. Carter was also the man who told a group of New York money men that this disgrace should continue for at least another year while he studied the system and adopted a go-slow policy on matters of tax reform. And at the same time he was saying these things, a Democrat Congress refused to reform the tax muddel In fact, they made it worse and opened more loopholes.

Mr. Carter is the man who time and time again pledged to reduce the number of Federal agencies if he were elected; but he's also the man after spending several hours with Ralph Nader decided there was room for one more super-billion-dollar agency designed to attract votes from consumers.

What Mr. Carter never sems to get around to is the fact that his own party members in Congress are the architects and perpetrators of the things he has denounced to win votes.

What Mr. Carter offers us is the same old thing that Democrats have always offered us: more government which will lead to one man with more power and a national citizenry with less power.

Oh, I've seen Mr. Carter's future, and I found it wanting. I've seen his kind of government issue regulations that say no when the people say yes. I've seen Mr. Carter's future, and I don't believe in it.

In fact, I might say that in my life, this country, the United States, has never lived in an era of so much promise in the field of peace, and I don't want to see it destroyed by a man and men who know absolutely nothing about foreign policy.

Oh, I've seen Mr. Carter's kind of devilment before. It was Mr. Carter's kind of devilment that told us in Boston that we couldn't send our children to the school next door. It was his kind of devilment that told us in Missouri that it could give our young daughters abortions without our even knowing about it.

It was Mr. Carter's kind of government that told us in St. Louis that it could tear down our neighborhoods. It told our military in Southeast Asia not to win, and forbade them to win. And I want no more of weak-kneed leaders.

Calls It a Disaster

Yes, we have seen Mr. Carter's government, and we don't want it. Ladies and gentlemen, it would be total disaster for our Republic.

Now, what the American people want is not so much to be told what is wrong as to be left free to discovr what is right.

What they want in addition to someone they can trust is to be trusted themselves.

I suggest we must take ourselves less seriously, and we must take more seriously the things in which we all believe.

We fight to keep this nation of free men and women from smothering in the Government excesses of the welfare state. We fight to keep our free institutions and free enterprise from strangling in the additional miles of red tape. In short, this is where we battle for the freedom of the individual, and let me remind you again our party stands for freedom and strength. It is what we believe in and it is what Americans want. Make no mistake about it. We are the last best hope on earth for sound, free government. and we must fight t orealize that hope before it is too lae.

We're not here to fight and argue with each other. We have two of the best candidates ever to come before a convention. Our job is to pick one and then all of us have to work and work and work to elect him. We don't need or need Mr. Carter and his warped ideas of what this country is al labout. We want freedom and continued peace.

Baker Address

These have been difficult years for the Republican party. The Watergate era was a painful time for all of us. You know that. I certainly know that.

Some in our party have gone through a crisis of faith, even wondering if the Republican Party had the strength to survive. But, we do. And we do because we faced our problems with honor and dignity. We performed as the country would expect us to perform. We did not shy away from our duty in that difficult time, even though we knew that Watergate would be embarrassing, humiliating, and even potentially devastating and indeed, we took a real drubbing in the 1974 elections because of it.

But since then, America has learned a lot about other political abuses in prior Democratic Administrations, and even in the present Democratic Congress—abuses of personal liberties, invasions of privacy, and political mischief of the most shocking type. But there is one big difference. We faced ours. and in so doing, we raised the country's expectations for honorable Government. But we are still waiting for the Democrats to face theirs.

And yet, now they are running around rattling the dusty old skeletons of Watergate all over again.

They can rattle those skeletons until the bones fall out, but it is not going to work. And let me tell you why: Because the issues in 1976 are Republican issues. Because the Republican record in 1976 is one we can be proud to run on, and one we deserve to win on. Because Republicans are now looking to the future of this country, while Democrats are still chasing the ghosts of the past.

So, to those in the opposition who day after day try to exploit the tragedy of Watergate for partisan purposes, and who pretend that one party, or one person, has had a monopoly on mistake, or bad judgment, I say: You know better. I know better. The people know better.

The Issue of Government

Let's put away past history. let's put aside hypocrisy. In this election, let's talk about what does divide the parties in 1976. And let's make Governor Carter level with the American people before the election about exactly what he proposes to do with the Government after the election.

The issue this year isn't virtue. It isn't love, or patriotism, or compassion. These are the common concerns of all of us, regardless of party. The issue this year, quite simply, is this: How much government is too much government? How many laws are too many laws? how much taxation is too much taxation? How much coercion is too much coercion?

We have greater economic strength, greater scientific and technological strength, than any nation, any time, anywhere, has ever had—and let's not forget the sources of that strength. It's not the government, it's the people of this country who provide that strength, and it's through the free will of a free people that we will continue to build that strength.

After the worst recession of the postwar period, our economy is in a solid, healthy recovery—with jobs up, incomes up, and inflation down—and it's recovering because a Republican Administration had the courage when it counted—to stand up against a Democratic Congress, to veto reckless spending, and resist the clamorous calls for controls and rationing.

Throughout our history, America has been remarkably right on the major decisions that have confronted her. Not only because she has often had wise leaders, but also because the people's judgment and wisdom, the common sense of America, has often supplied those answers.

The two-party system in the United States has served us well as the sensing mechanism by which the common sense of America has been determined. And, if we are going to meet those challenges of the future, averting the perils and fully realizing our promise, we must continue to hearken to the country's common sense—to those shared perceptions, those basic ideals, that reflect the popular wisdom and embody the national will.

Fear of Big Government

The common sense of America today is that even a freely elected government can become oppressive government. The common sense of America today is that government too much: it interferes too much: it bullies too much.

And because this is the common sense of America, the Democratic Party has four big problems this year. The first of those problems is Jimmy Carter. The second is Walter Mondale. The third is the Democratic Congress. And the fourth is that the American people don't want the kind of Government they would get from a cozy alliance between the big-spending Democratic Congress and a Carter-Mondale Administration.

You know, and I know, which party it is that speaks the common sense of America today. It is the Republican Party, which for years has fought an uphill battle to limit the size of Government, to limit the role of Government, to protect the individual against the encroachments of Governments.

And we say, We hear you, America, and we understand.

The idea of limited government is not one that we suddenly embraced when it became popular, but one that we preached when it was unpopular. We preached it because we shared the concern of Thomas Jefferson who warned his countrymen that "the natural progress of things is for liberty to yield and government to gain ground." We preach it because our aim is not the sullen calm of a regimented society, but the mutual respect of a free society. And we don't just preach it. We also practice it.

Jimmy Carter says he will never lie to us, but Jimmy Carter is the nominee of the party which gave us the original credibility gap. And the Jimmy Carter who talks about running against Washington is the nominee of the party which has created more than 1,000 new Federal programs and planned them so poorly that they made "Washington" sound like a dirty word.

At last month's Democratic convention, Carter made it clear in his platform and his acceptance speech that the same old tired approaches will be tried again. While he still bobs and weaves and straddles a lot of the issues, it is now clear that the Carter-Mondale politics will be more of the same: more programs, more promises, more controls, more spending, more taxes, more Government.

It is the same old road. And we have been down that road, and we have seen where it leads, and don't you let them do it to us again.

Rise in U.S. Spending

It is no coincidence that for 40 years of the last 44 years, the Democratic Party has been in control of Congress. And in those 44 years, Federal spending has risen from less than $4 billion to nearly $400 billion.

When it comes to big Government. Franklin Roosevelt was a piker compared to what Governor Carter's friends in the Democratic Congress have been giving us lately. Republicans Meet in Kansas City; Ford-Reagan Race Is in Doubt and platform questions hung over the delegates even as they cheered the arrival of Nancy Reagan and Betty Ford at the convention hall tonight.

Mr. Reagan was reported, for example, to have substantially more support in Pennsylvania and Illinois for his proposal to force Mr. Ford to disclose his Vice-Presidential preference than for his own Presidential candidacy.

The Reagan high command hopes to dislodge some of Mr. Ford's support in the rules fight or in a battle over a foreign-policy "morality" plank, made public today, that implicitly criticizes Mr. Ford and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger. Both could generate considerable emotion.

Only one other floor fight was foreshadowed when minority platform reports were filed this afternoon—an attempt by liberal women's activists to delete language favoring an anti-abortion amendment to the Constitution.

Buckley Steps Down

Another possible source of disruption was eliminated this morning when Senator James L. Buckley of New York, after pondering the idea for a week, announced that he would not seek the Presidentia nomination. Only one vote had been pledged to him, that of Benjamin N. Hewitt of Lewiston, N.Y., who announced that he would revert to support of Mr. Ford.

In the prepared text of his keynote speech, Mr. Baker, who is believed to be among the leading Vice-Presidential possibilities if Mr. Ford is nominated, acknowledged that his party "wears the scars of combat" from this year's intense contest.

"These have been difficult years for the Republican party," said the 50-year-old Senator, the son of a representative and the son-in-law of the late Senator Everett McKinley Dirksen. "The Watergate era was a painful time for all of us. You know that. And I certainly know that."

Challenges Democrats

Mr. Baker did not mention the principal victim of Watergate, Richard M. Nixon, who resigned the Presidency in its aftermath. Mr. Nixon was in San Clemente, absent from a Republican convention for the first time in 30 years. Nor did his party, which gathered in Miami Beach only four years ago to flionize him, exhibit his picture in the arena today.

Senator Baker sought to differentiate the Republican response to Watergate from the Democratic response to what he called "political abuses in prior Democratic Administrations and even in the present Democratic Congress."

"We faced ours, and in so doing, we raised the country's expectations for honorable government. But we are still waiting for the Democrats to face theirs," he said.

"And yet, now they are running around rattling the dusty old skeletons of Watergate all over again. They can rattle those skeletons until the bones fall out, but it is not going to work. And let me tell you why: Because the issues in 1976 are Republican issues."

Raising his sights beyond the Ford-Reagan contest to the battle with the Democrats this fall, Mr. Baker said that although Mr. Carter "bobs and weaves and straddles a lot of issues, it is now clear that the Carter-Mondale politics will be more of the same: more programs, more promises, more controls, more spending, more taxes, more government."

The Senator argued that "the common sense of America is that Government taxes too much, it meddles too much, it interferes too much, it bullies too much."

He listed four problems for the Democrats in November: Mr. Carter, Senator Walter F. Mondale of Minnesota, the Democratic Congress, and his belief that "the American people don't want the kind of Government they would get from a cozy alliance between the big-spending Democratic Congress and a Carter-Mondale Administration."

Differ on Figures

Mr. Baker calculated the cost of the Democratic platform at $110 billion. Speaking earlier, Mr. Rockefeller had put the cost at $200 billion—even though both texts, according to White House sources, had been vetted by the Ford staff to provide a consistency among Ford supporters.

After a self-mocking opener —"Unaccustomed as I am to being a noncandidate, I greet you tonight as the only noncandidate I know on this program"—the Vice President took out after the Democrats and their candidate.

"Read the Democratic platform with its pussyfooting prose," he told the delegates gathered in the modernistic arena, decked out in Bicentennial red, white and blue. "Try to figure out where the Democratic candidate stands on the issues. He really belongs on that television program called "What's My Line'?"

Two other speakers, both possible successors to Mr. Rockefeller, joined the partisan assault. Gov. Christopher S. Bond of Missouri said the Democrats gave the American people "peanuts" instead of "towering leadership" and "smiles" instead of "a denunciation of immorality in the Congress."

Mr. Dole, a former national chairman who is one of his party's most slashing orators, ticked off a list of apparent inconsistencies in Mr. Carter's record, ranging across such issues as defense, taxes, minorities and foreign policy.

"He thinks it is wrong to question him, said Mr. Dole of Mr. Carter. "He says it is a sign of desperation on the part of those who would question him. He says we are avoiding the 'issues' when we question him.

"I have news for him. It isn't wrong, it isn't desperate and it isn't personal. It's democracy."

Neither Mr. Ford nor Mr. Reagan was in the arena to hear the speeches. They had spent the day—and part of the evening—hunting desperately for more delegates.

Mr. Reagan met with Indiana, Alaska and Virginia delegations, not only to win over uncommitted delegates but also to solicit support for his rules-change proposal. He could be in considerable trouble in Indiana, where he has a 45-to-9 first-ballot edge because of a primary victory but where his support on procedural issues is much weaker.

Mr. Ford spoke to the Hawaiian delegation, among others, and met privately with individual delegates. At a meeting with chanting Young Republicans, the President raised his arms in a 'V-for-victory' gesture and shouted exuberantly:

"Wow! what a meeting! What What a convention! What a victory Wednesday night!"

Mr. Ford, who was said to have told members of the Hawaii and Guam delegations that five or six names now stood at the top of his Vice-Presidential list, was relying heavily on Mississippi votes to pad his lead over Mr. Reagan.

But the deeply divided Mississippi delegation went through another day without a decision and without voting on whether to retain the unit rule. A proposal from the Ford camp to divide the delegation, 15 to 15, was never considered.

The shifts came slowly, painfully, one by one.

Mr. Ford gained the support of Robert Harman of Keyser, W. Va., who said he had decided after having talked to former Gov. John B. Connally of Texas; Mr. Hewitt, the one-day partisan Mr. Buckley; and Sherry Shealy Martschink of Charleston, S.C., a member of the rules committee.

He also won endorsements from Louis Kindt of Waynesboro, Va., who decided after weeks of study that President Ford should have this opportunity; Roger P. Campbell of Bellevue, Pa.; William Skaggs of St. Louis and John Ostlund of Gillette, Wyo., who told Mr. Ford at a private meeting that he was pledging his vote in the hope that the President would work toward a Ford-Reagan ticket.

Finally, State Senator Charles E. Hughes, a retired state police captain, spent 45 minutes with the President and told him, four minutes into the conversation, "Mr. President, on the way over here I definitely made up my mind to support you."

He also told them about a new Gallup Poll that showed he had drawn closer to the Democratic candidate, Jimmy Carter, while Ronald Reagan failed to make any gain at all.

The President suggested this was another indication that he was more electable than his challenger for the Republican nomination.

The President made only one public appearance today, addressing a rally of young Ford supporters called the "Presidentials" this morning at the Trade Mart Building across the Missouri River.

The audience packing the hall was as fervid and noisy as any group that the President has spoken to during this campaign, nearly raising the roof with their applause, cheers and chants of "We want Ford."

Pep Talk by Ford

The President responded with an ebullient pep talk, saying, "Wow, what a meeting, what a convention. What a victory Wednesday night."

Mr. Ford's rhetoric was not very specific. He told his audience that "the young people of this country want their environment expanded." He said young people want "the kind of country where we can have a quality of life." He declared, "In the last two years, we have achieved peace abroad, and we are going to keep it abroad."

But the young audience did not seem to care much what was being said. They came prepared to cheer, and cheer and applaud they did with almost every sentence.

In addition to his own efforts, Mr. Ford has assigned about 50 of his supporters, including his wife, children, brothers, members of his Cabinet and members of Congress to act as his advocates before state delegations at the convention.

His campaign manager, Rogers C. B. Morton, said, "Since the President will be unable to visit personally with each state delegation, he selected strong, strong supporters to present his views to each delegation which requested it." Teams of supporters are scheduled to meet with 34 delegations before Wednesday.

Although the White House has reiterated that the President intended to spend half of each day working on affairs of the nation, he had little time for anything but politics today. He did sign 36 bills today, but most of them were of minor importance. One, however, did provide a $5.2 billion appropriation for the Department of Transportation and related agencies.

The Ford campaign committee announced, meanwhile, the formation of a new committee of state, county and local officials to support President Ford's nomination and election. Gov. Daniel J. Evans of Washington and Mayor Pete Wilson of San Diego are chairmen of the committee.

Reagan Wooing Delegates And Arguing Rule Change

Challenger Hopes to Force President to Choose Running Mate Before the Nominating Vote Tomorrow Night

By DOUGLAS E. KNEELAND
Special to The New York Times

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 16—In a round of meetings with state delegations and a group of black Republicans, Ronald Reagan pressed his search today for late-hour support in his struggle to capture his party's Presidential nomination.

To that end, as the Republican National Convention moved uneventfully through routine opening ceremonies at Kemper Arena here, the 65-year-old former California Governor was not only wooing delegates but was also ardently arguing his case for a change in the rules that would force his rival, President Ford, to name his Vice-Presidential choice before the nominating vote Wednesday night.

Early this morning, Mr. Reagan began his day's missionary work by driving about 20 miles east of here for breakfast with the Indiana delegation at the Quality Inn where it is housed in Blue Springs, Mo.

Principal Aim

From there he returned to his headquarters at the Alameda Plaza Hotel for a strategy luncheon meeting with Senator Jesse A. Helms and several other conservatives whom an aide called "just old friends" and for sessions with the Alaska delegates and representatives of the National Black Republican Council.

Continuing a search that is made more difficult by widely scattered housing of delegations that was brought about by Kansas City's shortage of hotel space, Mr. Reagan later took his entourage 12 miles south to Grandview, Mo., to address the Virginia group in its motel there.

This evening, he and his wife, Nancy, attended a Youth for Reagan and Young Americans for Freedom reception in downtown Kansas City.

Although the meetings with delegations and the blacks were closed, aides said that the candidate's principal aim was to attempt to sway as many as possible of the approximately 100 remaining delegates and to try to assure a victory in the expected floor fight tomorrow night over the move to compel President Ford to disclose his choice of a running mate.

Since Mr. Reagan surprised his party and most of the rest of the nation some weeks ago by naming Richard S. Schweiker, a Liberal Pennsylvania Senator who accompanied him on his rounds today, as the man he would offer as his Vice-Presidential candidate, if he was nominated, the Reagan forces have been pushing to get Mr. Ford to take a similar step.

a move to amend the convention rules to require a Presidential contender to make such a selection no later than 9 A.M. on the day of the nomination vote failed in the Rules Committee yesterday by a 59-44 margin.

Reagan strategists are expected to press the motion on the convention floor tomorrow night, where they are hopeful of succeeding.

They acknowledge that by such a vote they want to accomplish the following:

To force Mr. Ford to make a choice that might upset some of his backers, as Mr. Reagan's selection of the Liberal Senator Schweiker did some of his conservative allies, thereby weakening the President's support.

¶To demonstrate voting strength from the floor that surpasses most unofficial delegate counts, which generally find Mr. Reagan about 100 votes short of the 1,130 majority he needs for nomination, perhaps generating some psychological momentum before the crucial nominating roll call on Wednesday night.

Although the Ford organization has steadfastly resisted the efforts to choose a running mate, they have indicated that they would comply with the decision of the convention.

The Indiana delegation, which Mr. Reagan visited for breakfast, presents some special problems for him at the convention.

A Problem for Reagan

While he won the Indiana primary election and has a 45-to-9 edge over the President in the mandated first-ballot vote, a number of delegates are known to prefer Mr. Ford.

Since the delegation is not committed to vote the same way on a test of the rules such as the Reagan forces plan, it could cause trouble for them in the balloting on the requirement to disclose a Vice-Presidential choice. And if the nominating vote goes beyond one ballot, there could be a sizable shift of votes in the delegation away from Mr. Reagan.

"Indiana is committed on the first ballot, but they have a bit of interest in other affairs at the convention," John P. Sears, the Reagan campaign manager acknowledged today in explaining the candidate's visit to that group.

In caucuses, he said, "they shift back and forth."

Thomas S. Milligan, the Indiana Republican state chairman who heads the delegation and who is a Ford supporter although he is committed to Mr. Reagan on the first ballot, put it in somewhat different terms.

"I would think the President would pick up between 20 and 25 votes" on a second ballot," he said, adding that he did not expect the voting to take more than one ballot.

Mr. Milligan also said that he thought the Ford camp would pick up a similar number of Indiana votes in the floor test of the expected move for a rules change.

In his appearance before the group today, Mr. Reagan was presumably trying to strengthen his support on either a second ballot or a rules vote.

As for the others he addressed, Alaska has 17 Ford delegates and 2 uncommitted, while Virginia has 34 for Mr. Reagan, 13 for Mr. Ford and 4 uncommitted.

Only about 25 blacks showed up for the meeting with Mr. Reagan and not more than a handful of those were from the ranks of the 76 black delegates at the convention. A vast majority of the blacks here support President Ford, a few are for Mr. Reagan and about a half dozen are listed as uncommitted.

Convention Erupts With Arrival of Candidates' Wives

By JAMES T. WOOTEN
Special to The New York Times

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 16—The Republican National Convention suddenly erupted into a raucous battle of cheering and chanting tonight when the two candidates sent their wives as surrogate warriors.

Dressed in frocks of striking hue — the better to be seen in the giant, smoky hall — Betty Ford, in an aquamarine dress, and Nancy Reagan, in crimson, prompted a long and loud demonstration on the floor and in the balconies when they walked into Kemper Arena to watch the keynote session.

Unison chants of "We Want Reagan" broke out first and were met by equally energetic shouts of "We Want Ford." They grew in decibels until both were indistinguishable in the deafening din.

The 10-minute eruption was the first high moment of the convention and came in the early moments of the second session of the day after the 4,518 delegate and alternates had returned from an afternoon recess and reconvened for the keynote speech by Senator Howard N. Baker of Tennessee.

As it had in the morning, the evening session began on time and moved uneventfully for a few moments until a minor stir swept through the hall at the entrance of Vice President and Mrs. Rockefeller.

They took their seats in a section for honored guests at the south end of the arena, just above a long banner promoting "Ronald Reagan for President," and listened attentively as Gov. Christopher S. Bond of Missouri addressed the delegates.

Then, as though it had been planned, the introduction of Gov. James B. Edwards of South Carolina, the next speaker, an ardent supporter of Mr. Reagan, brought forth a rhythmic cheer from the Texas delegation, seated just below the Vice President on the convention floor.

"We want Reagan," the Texans shouted, insistently, and their cry was taken up in the balcony by Texas alternates and echoed from the Tennessee seats far across the hall—and suddenly Kemper Arena was awash in the roar.

As if on cue, Mrs. Regan appeared at the north end of the hall, the intensity of her bright red dress accentuated and exaggerated in the glow of television lights.

The convention orchestra abandoned "Carolina Moon" and struck up a sprightly version of "California, Here I Come," which served as a signal, and the pro-Reagan chorus roared even louder.

After four clamorous minutes, down the steps at the opposite end of the arena came Mrs. Ford in a dress of sparkling aquamarine and white, waving with one hand for a while, then shifting into the two-hand mode.

The Michigan delegation launched the chant "We Want Ford." It rippled across the floor, past the Reagan banner that had unfolded in the Indiana delegation, found fertile soil in the New Jersey section and echoed back again toward the President's wife, louder and louder, mixing and merging with the Reagan cheering, until it was all simply noise.

Band Confused

A bit confused by the unexpected histrionics, Manny Harmon, the conductor of the orchestra, simply waved his musicians silent—and then, spying the Vice President leaving his seat and heading up to the podium to make his speech, he signaled for "The Sidewalks of New York."

That lasted only a moment.

Inexplicably, the orchestra began "California Here I Come" again, pleasing the Reagan forces, shocking the Ford-bakers. Mr. Harmon, looked desperately down at George Murphy, the former California Senator and former actor who is running the entertainment at the convention.

No cue came and the music stopped again. Mrs. Ford waved acapella. The cue came. "The Michigan Fight Song" began. The Michigan section was joyous.

Finally, it subsided and Governor Edwards, who had been fairly ignored at the podium for the previous 10 minutes, equipped that he had "never been so warmly welcomed" in his life.

The Reagan partisans seemed ready to seize any opportunity to make known their passion. Their insurgent enthusiasm rose raucously throughout the evening, prompted once by the declaration of Mary Louise Smith, chairman of the Republican Convention, that Jimmy Carter would not be President.

"We want Reagan!" the chant began again.

And after Senator Robert Dole of Texas finished his address, the Reagan roars started again.

The excitement caused by the candidates' wives was some compensation for the difficulties that the delegates had getting into the hall.

Because the President may appear in the arena, security measures are stringent—and slow—and when Mary Louise Smith, the chairman of the Republican National Convention, called the convention to order this morning, several hundred delegates were still waiting outside, inching along in lines, heel to toe.

As hundreds of delegates shuffled slowly in the mid-morning heat, a gleaming limousine glided smoothly to a stop nearby and deposited a well-dressed man with a waxed moustache.

He did not seem to be a man who would stand still for standing still as he strode with practiced authority past all the others, pausing only momentarily at the gate and disappearing quickly inside.

"How'd he do that?" asked Effie McKerson, a delegate from Minnesota.

"Probably knows somebody," sighed Mary Forsyth, also of that state's delegation.

She was right. The man with the moustache was W. Clement Stone, who contributed $4.8 million to Richard M. Nixon's Presidential campaigns in 1968 and 1972.

In Walkie-Talkie Code, Ford Is Tarzan and Mrs. Ford, Jane

By CHARLOTTE CURTIS
Special to The New York Times

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 16—President and Mrs. Ford's code names on the political walkie-talkie network may have been inspired by the jungle of flowers and vines in their headquarters here at the Crown Center Hotel. Mr. Ford is Tarzan. Mrs. Ford is Jane. And Richard B. Cheney, the White House chief of staff, is Chimpanzee.

The Republicans also have their own convention telephone shorthand. The exchange is 467, which on the telephone dial comes out GOP. For the convention itself, one dials GOP-1976. For the President, the number is GOP-FORD. Ronald Reagan's headquarters is GOP-RR-76.

Kansas City, as virtually everybody paying even the slightest bit of attention to the Republican National Convention must know by now, considers itself fairly high on the barbecue ladder. But Senator Jesse A. Helms of North Carolina, who considers himself something of an expert on the subject, is no impressed.

At NBC's indoor picnic at the Crown Center yesterday, the Senator piled his plate high with samplings of barbecued ham, chicken and beef, took a big bite of beef and chewed thoughtfully.

"It's about 7 on a scale of 10," he announced. "North Carolina barbecue is 10."

Police Chief Joseph McNamara didn't get much sleep last night. He was barely in bed at 2:30 this morning, after investigating a crate of dynamite found in a vacant house, when the Yippies decided to move their encampment and he had to go negotiate with them. The time was 4 A.M.

By 7 o'clock, the Yippies were blasting delegates and everybody else at the Crown Center out of bed with amplified speeches calling for peace (they didn't say where) and the legalization of marijuana. Their slogan is, "Nobody for President."

"I told them they had to leave," Chief McNamara said. "They were violating a city ordinance."

The speeches on the power megaphone did not stop. Shortly after 8, Ben Masel, the Yippie leader arrested last week for driving on a lawn in suburban Roytown, Mo., was arrested for disorderly conduct and disturbing the peace.

"I've had better days," said 41-year-old Chief McNamara, a New Yorker with a doctorate in public administration. "Sunday, for instance."

On Sunday, the chief played tennis with Richard Salant, president of CBS News. Walter Cronkite was to have joined the party, but he canceled at the last minute.

"He made the ridiculous excuse that he had to go interview Richard Schweiker," the chief said.

The haberdashery in the Radisson-Muehlebach Hotel has emerged as THE bar of the various convention bars. Almost everybody who is anybody, whether he drinks or not, passes through its wood-paneled doors to settle at postage-stamp tables and eat free unshelled peanuts. It is de rigueur to toss the shells onto the marble floors.

On a good day, celebrity watchers can see Clarke Reed, the affable chairman of the Mississippi delegation; James Donely, John Connally's press man; or Bruce Morton, the resident wit of the CBS Morning News. One evening, grandmotherly Mary Louise Smith, the Republican chairman, peered in nervously, but she didn't enter.

While sitting there, cognoscenti comment knowingly on the men's antique clothes displayed in cases around the walls and, pointing vaguely toward the shops beyond the curtained windows, remind newcomers that President Truman's haberdashery was right over there somewhere.

Manny Harmon, the convention music director, says he is prepared to play songs for each of the 54 delegations and a lot of American cities. Mostly, however, he's going to stick with football songs because nobody recognizes many of the state songs.

Mr. Harmon is a Californian, and he is friendly with the Ronald Reagans. Their favorite song is "Lara's Theme" from "Dr. Zhivago." But he's at something of a loss as to what to do for Richard S. Schweiker, whom he has yet to meet.

"Now I know the Fords," he said amiably. "He really likes 'Oklahoma!' and she likes everything—especially if she can dance. I've danced with her and she's very good."

If the politicians were prepared for any eventuality at this convention, there were some things they would as soon escape. The President stepped into an elevator at the Radisson-Muehlebach Hotel this evening to travel one flight up to a reception. The elevator refused to ascend. So the President and his entourage tromped up a long stairway.

Mr. Ford paused at the top to greet onlookers. Behind him, unknown to the President, stood a strikingly familiar blonde, perhaps the one person in Kansas City with whom the President would least like to be on display.

P.G.A. Golfer to Miss Role at Convention

BETHESDA, Md., Aug. 16 (AP) — The violent storms that forced a one-day delay in the Professional Golfers Association national championship indirectly forced a minor change at the Republican National Convention in Kansas City.

Tom Watson, a Kansas City native who is one of the country's leading professional golfers, orginally was scheduled to lead the Pledge of Allegiance to the flag at the convention today.

With the weather delay, however, Mr. Watson was still competing in PGA tournament in this suburb of Washington, and was unable to attend the opening of the convention in Kansas City.

Intense Pressure Being Exerted On Vital Uncommitted Delegates

rather than unity. That is something the struggling Mississippi Republican Party can ill afford, the Democrats in that state having recently discovered new cohesion after years of division.

Though the Mississippi delegation has only 30 of the 2,259 votes at stake here, the closeness of the Ford-Reagan race has magnified their importance. Seldom in Republican convention annals have so few been so avidly sought by so many.

This morning, Ford headquarters suggested that the delegation throw out the unit rule and arbitrarily compromise on a 15-to-15 division. The Ford camp apparently felt its share would push the President over the top.

The Reagan leaders refused to go along, as did the Ford leaders.

"The problem is that neither side really knows how a vote to commit the delegation would turn out," Charles Pickering, a delegate from Laurel, said. "Then there's the matter of trying to come up with something that will keep our party together back home. It's all very difficult.

Reporting for this article was done by B. Drummond Ayres Jr. on the Mississippi delegation, Wallace Turner on West Virginia and Maurice Carroll on Pennsylvania.

Mr. Pickering classifies himself as "genuinely uncommitted but leaning to Reagan."

Unofficial polls of the Mississippi delegation indicate that President Ford might have an edge of a vote or two.

With that no doubt in mind, Senator Howard H. Baker Jr. of Tennessee showed up at the Mississippians' suburban hotel yesterday before most of the newly arrived delegates had found time to unpack. He pleaded—demanded might be a better word—that the delegation "choose up," get off the fence and throw in with the President.

'Time to Divide Up'

"You're in a position where you can make a determining difference," Mr. Baker said. "It's time to divide up—now."

But the delegation sat tight.

Its members had already weathered personal visits to Mississippi by President Ford and Ronald Reagan, followed up by many phone calls from Ford and Reagan operatives.

When the delegation arrived at the airport and at the motel, it had been set upon by chanting groups of Ford and Reagan supporters.

"It's all been going on so long, and so hot and heavy that I lose track," W. D. Mounger, Mr. Reagan's Mississippi leader, said wearily.

The Mississippi Republican Party has traditionally sent bound and uncommitted delegates to national conventions. That status has meant little in the past, however, because few conventions have been as closely contested as the 1976 one.

Only One With Rule

No other delegation in Kansas City is bound by a unit rule. For that matter, the Republican Party technically does not recognize unit rule restrictions, and members of bound delegations need not abide by a decision to impose a rule so far as convention officials are concerned.

"That means that only a moral obligation binds us," Michael L. Retzer, a Ford supporter from Greenville, explained. "It means that if the delegation eventually votes 16 to 14 to commit to Ford, then Ford gets all 30 votes when we go on the floor of the convention and not a one of the 14 Reagan supporters should object. Winner take all. Same goes should Reagan win."

Would the losers abide by the decision of the majority?

Or would they ask the chair to record their vote as originally cast—that is, for the caucus loser?

"I don't think it's going to come to that because I think there's going to be a compromise to keep us from tearing ourselves apart," Mr. Retzer said.

'All But 3 or 4'

"But if it does get to that point," he added, "I think all but three or four people will abide by the rule. That's the way we live in Mississippi and the South.

"These are honorable, upstanding people. They don't even look like Democrats. Besides, sooner or later, they're going to have to go back home and live with the people who sent them here—under specific instructions—not to mention the fellow delegates they would have turned on."

Mr. Retzer has come up with his own compromise suggestion, known in some convention quarters as the "Retzer rule."

It would give each Mississippi delegate and alternate one-half caucus vote. The 60-member delegation would then be polled and the resulting breakdown would represent the official Mississippi count.

It was not clear late today how much support there was in the delegation for the Retzer suggestion. But at least a leading member of the delegation, Gil Carmichael of Meridian, came out in support of it.

"I think it would be a good compromise," said Mr. Carmichael, a former candidate for governor. "It would have the advantage of giving the alternates a real role and it would give both sides here and back home something to hold on to."

The Mississippi delegation is scheduled to caucus tomorrow afternoon to prepare for the evening convention session, at which convention rules and a party platform will be odopted.

A rules fight could force the delegation to tip its hand about its Ford-Reagan breakdown. That would be particularly true should the Reagan forces attempt to push through a rule that would require President Ford to name his choice for Vice President before being nominated himself.

"I wouldn't be surprised if that isn't where it all comes out into the open," Clarke Reed, a Ford man, said. "We'll just have to wait and see, wait and see."

West Virginia: Moore's Stance

If West Virginia casts 20 of its 28 votes Wednesday night for the nomination of Gerald R. Ford for President that will mean that, in the Darwinian selection process that is Republican politics in his state, Gov. Arch A. Moore Jr. is the biggest cat in the jungle.

When the delegates arrived just after noon on Sunday, the Governor, a short man of 54 with prematurely gray hair, met them at the airport just after he had told reporters he guaranteed 20 Ford votes for the nomination.

Counting Mr. Moore's vote, 13 delegates had committed themselves to Mr. Ford, eight had committed to support Ronald Reagan of California, and seven were uncommitter.

"We'll cast 20 votes for President Ford Wednesday night, the Governor said. When he was pressed to explain where they would come from, he said he had the personal commitments of 19 delegates to support the President for nomination. The 20th vote would be Mr. Moore's.

He was asked where they wuld come from—was he promising that he could deliver all the uncommitted nine to Mr. Ford?

Indeed he was, he said. He was asked about two or three of the uncommitted delegates who seem in their answers to reporters to be leaning toward the Reagan camp. Was it not possible that he might lose some of his 20 votes?

"In the eight who say they are for Reagan, there are one or two soft delegates," Governor Moore said. "Unless I make it a personal matter, they will remain Reagan delegates. I don't want to make it a personal matter unless I have to do that."

One of the uncommitted West Virginia seven is Cecil H. Underwood, 53, who was elected Governor 20 years ago and is now the Republican nominee to succeed Governor Moore. They speak, and are cooperative in some matters; but they have not been friends since Mr. Moore defeated Mr. Underwood in the Republican primary eight years ago when Mr. Moore left the House of Representatives after 14 years to run for Governor.

"I haven't made any commitment to the Governor," Mr. Underwood said. "I haven't even talked to him about it. I haven't talked to anybody he sent to me. I don't intend to make up my mind until I can see how it is going."

Seeks Strong Ticket

As the candidate for Governor of the minority party in West Virginia, Mr. Underwood wants the strongest Republican ticket he can get. President Ford ran well ahead of Mr. Reagan in the primary where the 28 delegates were elected, each on the strength of his own name and campaign, for no ballot mention is allowed of the Presidential candidate the delegate wants to support.

At the same time, according to sources within the delegation, Mr. Moore is able to exercise great influence over Mr. Underwood. This is because the Governor is the most successful Republican politician in West Virginia's recent history. His friendly attitude in the fall campaign against John D. Rockefeller 4th, the Democratic nominee for Governor, is of great value to Mr. Underwood. Covert opposition from Mr. Moore would be disastrous.

Some of the Moore method of operation can be discerned in the makeup of the Ford-committed group with him. All the delegates were elected in the primary May 11. Somehow the voters saw fit to select 10 who were pretty close to Mr. Moore.

Acquitted in Spring

The election came six days after a Federal District Court jury acquitted Governor Moore and his administrative assistant, William H. Loy, of the charge that they had extorted $25,000 from a man who wanted a state bank charter.

Mr. Loy is a Ford delegate. Two others are wives of men appointed to judicial posts by Governor Moore. Another was named to an unexpired legislative term by the Governor. Thomas E. Potter, who is committed to President Ford, was appointed state Republican chairman by Mr. Moore.

Others are legislative leaders of the Moore administration years, or friends of many years or otherwise connected to the Governor.

Even the Reagan-committed delegates are respectful of Mr. Moore.

"Our Governor is one of the best we've ever had," said Paul Zakaib Jr., a lawyer who is a member of the State House of Delegates.

Mr. Zakaib, the son of a Syrian immigrant, was sitting this morning in a seat on the end of the row immediately behind Governor Moore in the convention hall. It is his first national convention; it is the Governor's sixth.

'Holding a Float'

Governor Moore predicted that the uncommitted in his delegation would soon begin to announce support for President Ford. He said, "I'm holding a float to counter any slippage that occurs elsewhere." He added that he could produce five pro-Ford announcements today if he wished.

Yesterday, the Governor said he would not crowd the uncommitted, who he said were "having a lot of fun." He said, "if you make them say who they're for right now, you disenfranchise them."

For Governor Moore, as his second term ends, it is a question of electability, and this is the argument he makes, the argument that he expects will bring him proudly into the convention hall Wednesday night to cast 20 West Virginia votes for President Ford.

"I have candidates for sheriff and for governor on this delegation," Mr. Moore said. "Almost everybody here is a practical politician and they know what they have to do.

Pennsylvania: Shifting Count

In shirtsleeves, Richard C. Frame, the rolypoly political professional who is the Republican chairman of Pennsylvania, stuffed into envelopes the tickets to allocate convention seats among his 103 delegates.

That was on Saturday when news organization counts showed President Ford with 80 Pennsylvanians, Ronald Reagan with 10 and 13 uncommitted.

"My count is 90 for Ford," Mr. Frame said.

As the convention opened, his count was still 90, although the maverick Senator from Pennsylvania, Richard S. Schweiker, who has agreed to be Mr. Reagan's running mate for Vice President, says he can count 23 Reagan votes in the delegation.

When, wondered a visitor at a wine-and-cheese reception that the Pennsylvanians, an amiable crowd, gave for themselves, would there be a formal caucus?

"When we can announce the 90 publicly," Mr. Frame said with a grin. The party establishment in Pennsylvania, which he represents, is working hard on the Ford side.

The 90 was his personal share of the magic number at this Republican convention—the 1,130 that would be needed to nominate the party's Presidential candidate.

And the maneuvers, the motives, the shifts and the feints in the Pennsylvania crowd gathered in the Hilton Plaza Inn amid the cornfields that border the international airport, some 17 miles from downtown Kansas City, mirrored the whittling down of the uncommitted lists that was going on today in many delegations.

There was an extra bite to the Pennsylvania situation because of Mr. Schweiker's role, an unexpected action that had greatly irritated state party leaders. Yesterday, for instance, when he brought Mr. Reagan to a delegation caucus, officials rehearsed a group of young demonstrators who, polite but noisy, chanted "We want Ford" as the Reagan and Schweiker entourage squeezed by.

A mixture of motives persuaded people to linger long in uncommitted status. Cal Griffith, an Altoona insurance broker, said that he hoped to have some effect on the makeup of the ticket. A lot of President Ford's possible running mates, he said, "are what I call 'blah.'"

Mr. Ford's state chairman Drew Lewis, said that at least one publicly uncommitted delegate had privately promised his vote to the Ford team, but that he enjoyed being interviewed on television so much that he wanted to delay public announcement.

"The only reason I'm not getting him now," said Mr. Lewis, "is that he wants another day of glory."

Mr. Lewis said he was certain that delegate support would not translate, vote for vote, into support of the Ford position on the crucial rules change proposal that would require a Presidential nominee to list in advance his choice for Vice President.

There were, he said, many nonpoliticians among the delegates, "and it sounds to them like a 'good-government' thing."

To the Ford team it sounds ominous on the theory that every potential candidate would get someone angry and, perhaps cost the President essential first-ballot votes.

Why do public counts and private counts of delegates differ?

"Some of these people might be lying to the news media," said Mr. Lewis. "But I know they're not lying to me."

His count showed 84 for Mr. Ford, with four more privately promising to join before the vote on Wednesday and two more, for a total of 90, by the first ballot.

23 for Schweiker

The Schweiker forces held to their claim of 23. Part of that number, they said, represented delegates supposedly pledged to Mr. Ford.

"These are friends of his, people who have given the Senator private assurances that, although they're listed for Ford, on the first ballot they'll be for Reagan," a Schweiker aide said today.

In some cases, the competing claims could be explained by a commodity that was in ample supply here as the two sides maneuvered over a comparative handful of votes—confusion.

As, for instance, the case of Edward Byrne.

Shifts to Ford

A 54-year-old linen company executive from Scottsdale, Mr. Byrne described himself a week or so ago as a conservative who deplored the Reagan alliance with Senator Schweiker. Yesterday, he had just announced his shift from uncommitted to Mr. Ford.

"I thought about it on the plane on the way out," he explained. "A lot of people had written me letters. There was no pressure, but then I decided."

Mr. Byrne strolled away and, a moment later, Mr. Reagan's Pennsylvania chairman, Gordon Hoffman, who owns a small recording studio near Akron, strolled up. Someone pushed a list of uncommitted Pennsylvanians in front of him and asked him to assess it.

"Byrne," said Mr. Hoffman, pointing. "He's one of ours."

But Mr. Byrne had just shifted to Mr. Ford, someone told him.

Mr. Hoffman blinked.

"Then," he said unhappily, "I guess he's one of theirs."

Close Contest Is Putting A Spotlight on Alternates

By SETH S. KING
Special to The New York Times

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 16—Being an alternate delegate has usually meant little more than paying your way to the national convention and standing by, in relative obscurity, while the regular delegates play their roles in nominating a candidate.

But not this year. With the Republican nomination literally hanging on a handful of uncommitted votes, any alternate replacing an absent delegate moves abruptly from the wings to center stage, under full spotlights.

One was Norma Russell of South Carolina. A Reagan supporter, Mrs. Russell was sent in last night to replace Mrs. Inez Eddings, a Ford supporter who was unable to be here.

This cost President Ford a potential vote and sent his South Carolina backers to the Credentials Committee, baying in full cry for Mrs. Russell's removal.

Defends Substitution

Mrs. Russell, a mother of two now serving her second term in the South Carolina Legislature, insists she was substituted for Mrs. Eddings strictly according to South Carolina party rules. She says the challenge against her showed the desperation of the Ford forces.

"I had the highest number of votes among the at-large alternates selected at our state convention, and this entitled me to be the first to replace a missing delegate," she declared. "There's nothing in our rules that says a Ford delegate must be replaced by a Ford alternate and I'm not budging."

Mrs. Russell laughingly says she holds the record for female filibustering, talking for three-and-a-half days in January to defeat a voter-registration-by-mail measure in the South Carolina House.

"The Ford people can challenge me in that committee all they want, but I can tell you they'll have to wrestle me physically to get my credentials away from me," she said.

Another Delegate Absent

A second South Carolina delegate, John Courson of Columbia, had not arrived in Kansas City this afternoon because of an illness in his family.

As a result, Willie Williams, a black real-estate developer from Columbia, suddenly found himself the center of attention with the South Carolina delegation. The leading alternate in the second district, he's in line to replace Mr. Courson, a Reagan backer.

But Mr. Williams says he's uncommitted, and now he's enjoying the blandishments of both sides.

Mr. Williams was talking rapidly as he was being tugged away from the lobby of the U-Smile Motel to be rushed across Kansas City to join other black delegates in a meeting with Ronald Reagan.

"I've never met Mr. Reagan," he said. "I'm not satisfied with the role blacks are playing in Ford's campaign. Reagan has shown real interest in blacks. I am going to see him now and I'll decide how I go."

Still in the Shadows

No such attention has been focused yet on Rudolph S. Rasin, an energetic Ford supporter who has toiled faithfully for the Republican cause in the Chicago suburb of Hinsdale.

"I'm relegated to just sitting up here in these reasonably good upper-tier seats and trying to watch what's happening on that floor below," Mr. Rasin said.

"Alternates attend all the Illinois caucuses and we've raised our voices on past occasions," he said. "But we don't have a vote, and besides, I'm for Ford. Nobody's bothering to lure me away."

A delegate may lend credentials to an alternate who can then go down to the convention floor and sit with the delegation. Presumably, the alternate could vote on something if the delegate failed to return when a vote was called.

Mr. Rasin smiled and said: "But I doubt that friendship and trust would go that far. When it's crucial, that delegate will be there."

Ready and Waiting

Mr. Rasin conceded it wold be bad form to wish that something would happen to prevent a delegate from taking a seat. "But we'll be right here waiting and ready if anything so unfortunate should occur," he said.

In his opening session with Illinois delegates and alternates yesterday, former Gov. Richard B. Ogilvie, the Ford supporter who heads the Illinois contingent, warned them that the television eyes of the nation would be focused on the convention floor.

"Stay awake and don't look bored," he cautioned. "And if you can't stay awake, go up and sit with the alternates, where they can't see you."

Stassen's Volunteers Still Give Out Buttons

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 16 (UPI)—One of the loneliest places in town is Harold E. Stassen's "Uncommitted Delegate Headquarters," staffed chiefly by volunteers who were not born when he first sought the Republican Presidential nomination in 1948.

But Mr. Stassen's army of 12 volunteers has managed to give away, mostly to collectors, 200 Stassen buttons (which cost the Stassen treasury 35 cents apiece) and had to order 700 more.

Two volunteers, Datha McMahill, 16 years old, and Jay Glass, 19, of Independence, Mo., and a paid staffer, Renee Murray, 25, of Warrensburg, Mo., were manning the cloth-covered table today in an out-of-the-way corner of the Radisson-Muehlebach Hotel. Others passed out Stassen literature outside Kemper Arena.

NSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 16 esident Ford has already y narrowed his list of ble Vice-Presidential run-mates, and he is expected me a skillful and vigorous aigner who could bear of the burden of a fall on race, sources close to aid today.

Mr. Connally appears to be more popular among the delegates than anyone except Mr. Reagan as a Vice-Presidential choice for Mr. Ford, and he is especially admired by conservatives. He is anathema, however, to many liberals in the party who fear his selection would evoke public association with the Nixon Administration.

Friends of Mr. Connally said today that they had been encouraged by White House and Ford campaign officials to believe that Mr. Connally was still very much in the running and to discount convention rumors that Senator Baker now stood first in Mr. Ford's estimation.

Senator Baker also suffers from several handicaps. There has been controversy, for instance, about large land sales he once made in Tennessee to a strip mining company.

Senator Dole has seemed to be almost auditioning for a job in the campaign against Jimmy Carter, remarking yesterday that Mr. Carter had taken so many positions on section 14(b) of the Taft-Hartley Labor Relations Act, which allows states to outlaw union shops, that "he thinks now that 14(b) is his shoe size." However, some at this convention do not see Senator Dole's personality as sufficiently "presidential."

Senator Dole, the convention's temporary chairman, and Senator Baker, the keynote speaker, both had the opportunity to show their political appeal in speeches tonight to the convention.

Others Under Consideration

Others believed to have enjoyed close and serious consideration by Mr. Ford include three Governors — Robert D. Ray of Iowa, Daniel J. Evans of Washington and Christopher S. Bond of Missouri. They might help offset the non-Washingtonian image that has helped Mr. Carter, but they are relatively unknown and are untested in a national campaign.

Senator Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania said today he had personal knowledge that William W. Scranton, the United States Representative to the United Nations, "is very high on the President's list" and has "a very real chance."

Anne Armstrong, Ambassador to Great Britain, is the only woman on the list and might be a bold choice, but perhaps a difficult one for the sometimes cautious and personally conservative President.

Secretary of the Treasury William E. Simon, Secretary of Commerce Elliot L. Richardson, Secretary of Defense Donald H. Rumsfeld and former Deputy Attorney General William D. Ruckelshaus have also all been mentioned.

Mr. Richardson is disliked by some conservatives and Mr. Simon is much admired by the same group. Mr. Ruckelshaus, who was approached at one point by aides to Mr. Reagan before Mr. Reagan chose Senator Richard S. Schweiker as his prospective running mate, might have the broadest appeal in this group. However, it is hard to say whether any of the four would satisfy the demand for a tough campaigner.

The character and reputations of the four men would help, many people believe, in bluntting the morality in Government and integrity themes that Mr. Carter used effectively in the Presidential primaries.

York delegation, Mr. Rosenbaum declared this evening that he would close tomorrow's caucus to newsmen — a move that touched off loud protests from Reagan supporters.

¶Vice President Rockefeller and Mr. Rosenbaum spoke at today's convention sessions while Senator Buckley introduced the keynote speaker, Senator Howard H. Baker Jr. of Tennessee.

¶Senator Baker was the first choice for the Vice-Presidential nomination in a canvass of the 35-member Connecticut delegation, which is unanimously supporting Mr. Ford. The Secretary of Commerce, Elliot L. Richardson of neighboring Massachusetts, was the second choice. Vice President Rockefeller was fourth behind William E. Simon, Secretary of the Treasury.

¶Senator Clifford P. Case and the New Jersey Assembly minority leader, Thomas Kean, leaders of the state's delegation, which is strongly supporting President Ford, said that John B. Connally would be unpopular as a Vice-Presidential candidate with New Jersey delegates. "There is a strong feeling in the delegation against John Connally," said Mr. Kean. There is also anti-Connally sentiment in New York. Mr. Kean and Mr. Rosenbaum of New York are playing major roles in the Ford delegate-hunting operation. Mr. Kean will be responsible for rounding up votes for Mr. Ford and his positions on rules and platform in three delegations while Mr. Rosenbaum will be overseeing six delegations. Both Republicans have been attending strategy meetings of various kinds almost nonstop since Saturday.

¶Six uncommitted delegates in New York and three in New Jersey held their ground. Several said that they had not even been talked to here by either the Ford or Reagan delegate hunters outside their own delegation.

Geography provided a measure of protection for New Jersey's uncommitted delegates. The delegation members, along with their Connecticut colleagues, are quartered in two motels 15 miles northeast of the city.

Mr. Buckley had remained at his Connecticut home over the weekend while the last efforts, including formation of a "draft" committee, were made to get his campaign off the ground. He arrived here last night and after a conference with Representative Philip Crane of Illinois, who was spearheading the draft-Buckley movement, decided to give up the effort.

Mr. Crane, who appeared with the Senator and his wife, Ann, at the news conference, claimed "solid commitments" for the Senator from only 12 of the 2,259 delegates at the convention.

Mr. Buckley declined again to choose between Mr. Ford and Mr. Reagan, saying that he could support either. He supported the position of the Reagan forces in the New York delegation by declaring, in response to a question, that it would be "healthy" for both the President and Mr. Reagan to address the New York delegates.

However, Mr. Rosenbaum had obvious doubts about whether such appearances would be in the best interest of Mr. Ford. Although Mr. Reagan sent in writing a formal request to speak to the New York delegates, Mr. Rosenbaum said he would discuss it with delegates at the closed caucus.

Mr. Rosenbaum disclosed that such Ford supporters as the President's son, Jack, Secretary of Commerce Elliot L. Richardson, Senator Pete V. Domenici of New Mexico and Governor Christopher S. Bond of Missouri would speak at the closed caucus.

The last three are Vice Presidential possibilities on a Ford ticket. Mr. Rosenbaum said he saw no inconsistency or discourtesy in the invitation to the Vice Presidential possibilities and his doubts about a Reagan appearance.

"This isn't bean bag we're playing here in Kansas City," he said.

Mr. Rosenbaum said he was closing the caucus because delegates had complained to him of disruptions caused by newsmen. He denied that he was trying to keep any pro-Reagan effort in the delegation out of public sight. "I know that's how it will be interpreted but it's not true," he said.

2 Ford Delegates Report Offer To Get Them to Change Votes

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 16 (AP) — Two Illinois delegates pledged to President Ford have told the Federal authorities that they have been offered a "material consideration" to change their votes on the first Republican Presidential nominating ballot, former Illinois Gov. Richard B. Ogilvie said today.

Mr. Ogilvie, himself a Ford delegate and the head of the Illinois delegation, refused at a news conference to give the names of the two delegates or to say what they had been offered. He said he did not know who had made the offers. He stated only that the delegates favored Mr. Ford for the Republican nomination.

Charles Black, Midwest coordinator for Ronald Reagan's campaign, dismissed the allegations, calling them "a little political guerrilla raid, more desperation tactics" by the Ford camp.

"This is another example of the desperation, low-road politics the Ford camp has been engaging in for months now, accusations like this," he said.

Mr. Ogilvie said that the two delegates "were offered a material consideration to change their votes. The fact is that two people were approached, two Ford people were approached."

Bill Williams, special agent in charge of the Kansas City office of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, confirmed that a complaint has been lodged. He said that the Justice Department was considering an investigation.

Mr. Ogilvie sai dthat the two delegates "were approached before they came here and they have been approached since they came here."

Conservatives Deny Plan to Walk Out Of Sessions or Work for Third Party

By CHRISTOPHER LYDON
Special to The New York Times

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 16 —The threat of a conservative walkout and the report that a third party was germinating in the Republican right wing are among the first casualties of convention week. Wispy notions to begin with, they were repudiated today by conservative spokesmen.

Senator Jesse A. Helms of North Carolina, around whom third party gossip swirled briefly over the weekend, dismissed the possibility as "an exercise in futility."

Senator James L. Buckley of New York, whose shortlived interest in the Republican Presidential nomination seemed to some like an early maneuver in a third party strategy, said today that a national conservative party would be "dangerous for the country" this year.

Conservatives must support the Republican nominee, whoever he is, against Jimmy Carter's ambition to restore an aggressive Democratic Presidency, Mr. Buckley said. "I'd hate to see a single vote drained away," he added.

The talk of a conservative bolt arose last week when some delegates feared that President Ford, if nominated, might pick a fellow "moderate" from the East or Middle West as his running mate.

The Long View

It appears that there was more petulance than potency in the talk of rebellion. Among those who take a long view of party movements, there was never the sort of popular dynamism that propelled the "Silver Republicans" to leave the 1896 convention that chose William McKinley and the Gold Standard, or produced Theodore Roosevelt's Bull Moose party in 1912 or ignited Strom Thurmond's walkout from the Democratic convention in 1948.

When Teddy Roosevelt, the primary winner in 1912, failed to deny President William Howard Taft the Republican nomination, 20,000 Progressives greeted him in a nearby convention hall in Chicago, where he proclaimed, "We stand at Armageddon, and we battle for the Lord."

That fall, he won six states and 88 electoral votes for the Bull Moose ticket, preventing a Republican victory in all but two states and effectively electing Woodrow Wilson, the Democratic nominee.

But none of the crucial ingredients of a major party fission have been evident here. No charismatic leader has appeared, nor has there been a clear-cut emotional issue to roil the nation as well as the convention delegates.

"I don't know that a bolt ever happened in such dead times as these," Walter Karp, historian of party affairs, said in an interview today. "It takes a large upheaval in the country to make people give up the comfort of party."

It is symptomatic of that point that Republican officeholders here show very little interest in a new party. Theodore Roosevelt, by contrast, easily enlisted Hiram Johnson, the Governor of California, as his Bull Moose running mate.

But Senator Buckley typified the pattern of Republican conservatives this week. In trouble already with Vice President Rockefeller and his supporters in the New York party, he seemed intent on rebuilding his bridges to the party core before the Republican primary next month.

Gov. Meldrim Thomson Jr. of New Hampshire, mentioned months ago as the sort of conservative a third party might want to nominate, is preoccupied at home by a campaign to win the Republican nomination to the Governor's office.

Senator James A. McClure of Idaho echoed his conservative colleague, Senator Helms, in affirming his Republican loyalty.

"Trying to launch a third-party effort founders for lack of party organization at the grass roots," Senator McClure was quoted today as saying. "Nor do I see any colorful, articulate leadership around which to build a third party."

Difficulties Cited

More than anything that has happened here, the event that has squelched the third-party threat was the Democratic nomination last month of Jimmy Carter, a moderate Southerner. This has drastically reduced the power of Republican conservatives to bargain on electoral votes in the South.

William Rusher, publisher of The National Review, in commenting on the difficulties that face the third-party convention he has scheduled for Chicago 10 days hence, said, "The nomination of Carter by the Democrats, unquestionably, presents a new and complicated problem for those who wish to unite America's conservative majority in a brand-new party."

Howard Phillips, one of Mr. Rusher's allies, granted today that what they had once grandly named the New Majority Party will now be aiming at a small fringe vote in November, and perhaps the wrong fringe at that.

The hope of Mr. Phillips and Mr. Rusher, both disaffected Republicans, had been to fashion a ticket that would supplant their old party by siphoning economic conservatives from it. The effect of their new-party activity could be just the opposite, however. At their Chicago convention they will be combining forces with disaffected Democrats, Southern-based heirs to the independent candidacy of Gov. George C. Wallace of Alabama in 1968. And the favorite candidate of the Democrats in this uneasy coalition, Mr. Phillips said today, is Lester G. Maddox, the segregationist former Governor of Georgia.

The effect of a Maddox nomination, Mr. Phillips said, "would be to take votes from Jimmy Carter in the South.

"Our strategic objective, on the contrary, is to hurt the Republicans," he said.

New campaign laws have changed the workable base for a third-party movement. Traditionally, third parties have concentrated their efforts regionally either to win electoral votes, as the Dixiecrats did in 1948 and Mr. Wallace in 1968, or to tip the balance in various states.

A New Objective

Because of the new Federal campaign subsidy law, the immediate objective is to win 5 percent of the national vote for President which would entitle a new party to substantial reimbursement of its expenses and guarantee Federal funding in 1980. But even that 5 percent threshold looks discouragingly high to Mr. Rusher and his friends. Mr. Phillips, asserted only that a 5 percent vote for their ticket this year was "conceivable."

There is consolation, however, for the third-party conservatives in the fact that both major parties have paid them so much attention, enough to bring a Wallace endorsement of Mr. Carter and, in the Republican Party, to bring Mr. Reagan within an ace or two of the Presidential nomination.

"What we're after," Mr. Rusher said, "is conservative influence on American society. So when the Democrats have nominated the first non-incumbent Southerner of relatively conservative stripe since 1844, and when President Ford is running around Kansas City insisting he is just as conservative as Ronald Reagan, who is only inches behind him and gaining, I have to say that the glass is not simply half-empty, alas, but half-full, so maybe we can make it a little fuller."

Elder Statesman of Party

Barry Morris Goldwater

By MAURICE CARROLL
Special to The New York Times

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 16—Elder statesman (a term, his friends say, that he detests) of a party that once was seized by his supporters in a classic display of partisan political warfare, Senator Barry Morris Goldwater of Arizona has changed less in personal style than in public perception.

Man in the News

There was, in the "new" Barry Goldwater who followed his onetime adversary, Nelson A. Rockefeller, on the speakers' schedule of the Republican convention tonight, a good deal of the "old" Barry Goldwater whose pungent prose stirred partisan passions a dozen years ago when he was the party's candidate for President.

Twenty-one times tonight, the conservative crowd at this Republican convention applauded Mr. Goldwater, sometimes when he paused for effect, a couple of times with real enthusiasm. The applause was mixed with appreciative laughter when in reference to the Democratic candidate, Jimmy Carter, he said, "I have seen Mr. Carter's future, and it is Lyndon Johnson's past."

But there was a touch of pathos in his reception. Mr. Goldwater's applause lines were as peppy as they always had been, but he spoke above a hubbub on the floor, a far cry from the rapt attention the faithful had paid to their candidate in 1964.

Then his supporters, who had built up delegate strength state by state while many party regulars were looking the other way, had booed and hooted as Mr. Rockefeller, then the Governor of New York, spoke in support of a proposed platform amendment denouncing extremism. And Mr. Goldwater, in his acceptance speech, had said, "Extremism in the defense of liberty is no vice. . . Moderation in the pursuit of justice is no virtue."

Now, although the text of his speech carried a sharp denunciation of Mr. Carter, it was laced with suggestions that the party transcend partisanship.

Then, Mr. Goldwater spoke for a party faction that had waged intramural war against the Liberal wing represented by the likes of Mr. Rockefeller.

Now, Mr. Goldwater is a supporter of President Ford —although many rank-and-file adherents of Ronald Reagan are the spiritual ancestors of the legions that nominated Mr. Goldwater in 1964—but he was careful to speak kindly of both men.

"We have two of the best candidates ever to confront a convention," Mr. Goldwater said. "We must pick one and then all of us must work, work, work to elect him."

The Reagan side could be forgiven for feeling that Mr. Goldwater's oratorical balm came a bit late. When, in taking issue with the belligerent Reagan stand on the Panama Canal, the issue that finally put Mr. Goldwater solidly on President Ford's side, the Arizona Senator had said with the bluntness that has delighted connoisseurs of off-off-the-cuff political prose:

"I have to support the Ford position of renegotiation. I think Reagan would, too, if he knew more about it."

Not only was the Senator on the Ford side, but two of those who helped fashion the brilliant campaign to capture the 1964 nomination for him, Dean Burch and F. Clifton White, played major roles here on the Ford team.

Their 1964 performance faltered when the intramural fight ended and the real game began — Democrat against Republican. The slippage was due at least in part to Mr. Goldwater's addiction to off-the-cuff prose.

First elected to the United States Senate in 1952, he had not adjusted to all the niceties of national press coverage when he became a national candidate a dozen years later. "The guys who covered him in Arizona," said one of the guys who covered him in Arizona, "would know when he made a slip and they wouldn't report it."

But, as a Presidential candidate trailed by a big, competitive and not notably kindly press entourage, he did things like calling for a "voluntary" system of Social Security that helped to seal what probably was inevitable anyway — a landslide defeat at the hands of Lyndon B. Johnson.

In part it was Mr. Johnson's escalation of the Vietnam War, after a campaign in which Mr. Goldwater had been depicted as trigger-happy, that prompted subsequent sympathetic reinspection of the Arizona Senator. In part it was his bluntly honest criticism of President Nixon during the Watergate days.

He sat in his small suite in the Radisson-Muehlebach Hotel this afternoon, a cane at his side, pain lines still showing in his face from a hip operation in June, and put the finishing touches on his speech. He had brought only one copy of it from Washington, in part, suggested a friend, because he did not intend to let "the Ford people or anyone else fool around with his words."

Reagan's Plank Criticizes Ford-Kissinger Policies

form, and on the foreign policy proposal.

Aides to Mr. Ford said that they wanted to preserve the platform as written and indicated that they would fight both minority reports, especially the one on foreign policy.

Ron Nessen, Mr. Ford's press secretary, said later that the platform as written by the committee was acceptable to the President. "If any amendments are offered on the convention floor, we will study each proposal and determine our position," he said.

Challenge Is Possible

There also remained the possibility that Ford delegates might make a parliamentary challenge to consideration of the foreign policy plank on the ground that, while some of the issues mentioned had been debated by the Platform Committee, the language of the plank had not been voted on in committee.

John P. Sears, Mr. Reagan's campaign director, insisted that the proposed plank "doesn't criticize any previous foreign policy decision" and represented an effort to try to add what he termed "some proper principles" to the platform.

Representative John B. Anderson of Illinois, a key Ford delegate on the committee, termed the Reagan plank "not anything terribly devastating," but added, "I don't think the party platform should go out of its way to criticize our own President."

The plank praised Aleksandr I. Solzhenitsyn, the Soviet dissident, "for his compelling message that we must face the world with no illusions about the nature of tyranny" without mentioning Mr. Ford's refusal to invite him to the White House last year.

It added that in pursuing détente with the Soviet Union, a term no longer used by Mr. Ford but still criticized by conservatives, "we must not grant unilateral favors with only the hope of getting future favors in return."

The plank also said that agreements, such as the one signed last year in Helsinki, "must not take from those who do not have freedom the hope of one day gaining it." In that agreement, the Western allies acknowledged the Communist hold in Eastern Europe in exchange for an understanding that the Soviet Union would loosen the exchange of peoples and ideas.

In addition, the plank pledged commitment to a foreign policy "in which secret agreements, hidden from our people, will have no part."

Asked if the plank amounted to a repudiation of Mr. Kissinger, Mr. Sears replied with a smile, "Well, it doesn't mention Mr. Kissinger."

The Reagan forces decided to concentrate their platform effort on the one foreign policy plank rather than diffuse it with a series of minority reports trying to overturn other planks dealing with such issues as what the United States posture should be in negotiating a new Panama Canal treaty and pledging continued support for Taiwan.

The minority report to delete the antiabortion section of the platform was organized by Ann Peckham of Wisconsin and Representative Millicent Fenwick of New Jersey, both Ford delegates, and other women on the committee.

"We just don't believe it belongs in a party platform," Mrs. Peckham said. "It is an issue that should be decided privately."

An article on the equal rights amendment's proponents and opponents at the convention appears on Page 36.

Text of Platform Proposal

Special to The New York Times

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 16—Following is the text of a proposed amendment to the Republican platform, entitled "Morality in Foreign Policy," that will be submitted to the party convention tomorrow night by delegates supporting Ronad Reagan:

The goal of Republican foreign policy is the achievement of liberty under law and a just and lasting peace in the world. The principles by which we act to achieve peace and to protect the interests of the United States must merit the restored confidence of our people.

We recognize and commend that great beacon of human courage and morality, Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn, for his compelling message that we must face the world with no illusions about the nature of tyranny. Ours will be a foreign policy that keeps this ever in mind.

Ours will be a foreign policy which recognizes that in international negotiations we must make no undue concessions; that in pursuing détente we must not grant unilateral favors with only the hope of getting future favors in return.

Agreements that are negotiated, such as the one signed in Helsinki, must not take from those who do not have freedom the hope of one day gaining it.

Finally, we are firmly committed to a foreign policy in which secret agreements, hidden from our people, will have no part.

Honestly, openly, and with a firm conviction, we shall go forward as a united people to forge a lasting peace in the world based upon our deep belief in the rights of man, the rule of law and guidance by the hand of God.

Stern Plays Rochberg, A Tanglewood Success

By DONAL HENAHAN
Special to The New York Times

LENOX, Mass., Aug. 16—There is an uneasy feeling among some contemporary composers and other musicians that their art may have taken a wrong turning somewhere around World War II. A few, of course, would discern the turning point earlier, around World War I. And a few other radical conservatives might want to place it even further back in time, around, say the Crusades.

For George Rochberg, whose Violin Concerto was performed by Isaac Stern and the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood yesterday afternoon, the time to re-examine seems to be the peak years of Bartók and Prokofiev. That is, the late 30's and early 40's. Mr. Rochberg's concerto was composed in 1974 and was given its premiere performance by Mr. Stern and the Pittsburgh Symphony the following year. This reviewer is in no position to say how it sounded at that first exposure, but in its Boston Symphony premiere, under the baton of Seiji Ozawa, the concerto turned out to be nothing less than a popular success.

The work is long by modern-music standards: 40 minutes. Few enough composers nowadays know how to cover a time span of 15 minutes, because of the obsession with economy and non repetition that Anton Webern's genius imposed on postwar music. But Mr. Rochberg's Concerto is 19th century in length as well as in mood and instrumental technique. The solo part is unrelenting and exhausting — perhaps a bit too much for the good of either the violinist or his listeners, in fact — but Mr. Stern carried it all off with even more than his customary vigor and spirit.

Mr. Rochberg categorizes his concerto as basically tonal (though the tonalities are often submerged in a thick chromaticism) and he says he has consciously tried to work in the violin concerto tradition that extends from Mozart through Schoenberg. But the impression that one took away from this performance was of a composer who had gone back to Bartók, essentially, to think it all over. A phrase or two in the second movement sounded like quotations from the Concerto for Orchestra.

As in his Third String Quartet and other recent pieces, Mr. Rochberg has decided to compose in a style that few of his academic contemporaries can sympathize with. Thus a work such as this concerto is an artistically and professionally daring effort. But with the aid of Mr. Stern, Mr. Ozawa and the undauntable Bostonians, the composer's effort was rewarded on this occasion by considerable public affection. That doesn't happen much with new music.

The Rochberg performance was part of Tanglewood's five-day Festival of Contemporary Music, which continued last night in the Theater-Concert Hall with a program of mostly older works. One, in fact, was elderly: Nikos Skalkottas's Octet (1931), a neatly crafted serial piece that now seems remarkably thin and bloodless.

The most recent work of the night, Chinary Ung's "Mohori" (1974), also sounded thin, but in its own exotic way, though Janice Meyerson's handling of the wordless mezzo-soprano part did not seem to be at fault. Mr. Ung, a Cambodian who has studied with Chou Wen-Chung, George Crumb and Mario Davidovsky, mirrors in this work some of his teachers' mannerisms without working out his material into anything of substance. At its best, however, "Mohori" had in this first performance a gossamer fragility in color, texture and sonority that seduced the ear, even if the impressions too easily slipped away.

From the 60's came Betsy Jolas's "D'un Opera de Voyage," a tightly organized work for chamber orchestra that alternated violent outbursts with tenuous delicacy in a style that recalled the earlier serial abstraction of Boulez.

From the same decade came "Jeux" (1963) by Theodore Antoniou, who is assistant director of the festival and who conducted the entire night's program. Mr. Antoniou's "games" involved a cellist, David Heiss, exploiting extreme reaches of such technical devices as glissando, vibrato, pizzicato and tremolo, often in ways that put one in mind of the ear-shattering works of Xenakis. Mr. Antoniou's Grecian compatriot. A lot of aural excitement was churned up by the virtuosic Mr. Heiss, though the nature of the work struck one as an exploitation of surface effects, rather than deeply communicated music.

The program was rounded off with Dallapiccola's "Una Piccola Musica Notturana" (1954) and Christian Wolff's "Septet" (1964).

Ailey's Salute to Ellington Blends the Old and New

Ailey (Alvin) has been celebrating Ellington (Duke) from the very start of his choreographic career but has capped it with this past week, devoted exclusively to dances set on Ellington's music. The celebration has been the culmination of a long love affair that Mr. Ailey has had with the music of this modern master. His company presented a selection of old and newly minted dances on Sunday at the State Theater.

"Reflections in D" showed Dudley Williams softly toying with the low-keyed, slightly blue mood of this nocturne-like piece. His special strength has always been to combine an effortless attack with razor-sharp timing so that he is in the right place at the right time without ever having made any effort to be there. "Reflections in D" is exactly the type of piece that gives him full opportunity to show his soft precision, and he was totally in command all the way.

Threading through both the matinee and evening performances were several new works danced and choreographed for the Alvin Ailey Repertory Workshop. The opportunity to work on the big stage at the State Theater was a wonderful one for the smaller company, but the works that they brought were basically at a workshop evel. They were missing an individual accent for the most part and tended to lean heavily on recognized styles rather than to strike out on any original paths.

Raymond Sawyer's "Afro-Eurasian Eclipse" combined five Ellington pieces starting with an early 1926 number and then leaping into the late 60's and early 70's for the other four selections. There was one male figure, "JuJu Man," powerfully danced by Alistair Butler, linking all of the ections. The earliest one was a ricky-ticky social dance that was the most effective part of the piece. Subsequent sections relied upon unison run and cower or run and celebrate gestures that repeated and repeated without any further development. What started as social observation trailed off without resolution.

Christyne Lawson dedicated "Still Life" to Paul Gonsalves, who was the saxophonist in the performance of "Diminuendo and Crescendo in Blue" that accompanied the piece. Five dancers. Marla Bingham, Ronnie Favors, Lonne Moretton, Clayton Palmer and Mr. Butler, showed anger toward the outside world before they coursed off into their round of unison and solo passages. They were self-contained and ended with a communal cluster that more or less fixed the hermetic feeling of the dance. Their involvement with one another was technically adept but never really spoke to the onlooker directly. One could admire the skill displayed and not care at the same time about their private world.

In the evening Dianne McIntyre presented "Deep South Suite" to music of the same name. It was a series of reflections on community mores in the South, including a touching and humorous vignette between a black girl, Miss Favors, and a white boy, Mr. Moretton, who kept up public separation while favoring private integration. The duet also stood out against the group passages, which tended toward the conventional.

The program started with one of Mr. Ailey's most accomplished recent works "The Mooche." It had glamour that oozed from every gesture of its four celebrated women. Estell Spurlock tapped out the rhythmic life of Florence Mills, and Sarita Allen as Marie Bryant quite simply knocked her admirers flat with well-placed hip thrusts as she danced "The Shepherd." Enid Britten was the devout and songful Mahalia Jackson and Judith Jamison was the stormy and sultry Bessie Smith. She wielded her shawl like a matador's cape, with cunning and panache. The whole had the finish and polish that characterized a glittering era in the theater and clubs.

"Three Black Kings" made a moving statement about men of peace, and the evening concluded with Louis Falco's funny and slightly dizzy "Caravan." It has a wonderful solo lead for Miss Jamison that goes on and on and a happy clog dance for Mr. Williams that could light up any evening. The official Ellington week is over, but the celebration will go on as long as Mr. Ailey has some dancers and a studio to set dances in.

faced again as the 70's brought a worsening of the institution's financial problems, and the museum hired Richard Weinstein, an architect and urban planner, to conceive a general scheme. Mr. Weinstein, a long-time member of the Lindsay administration's urban-design team, brought in other consultants, including Donald H. Elliott, former chairman of the City Planning Commission and now a lawyer for the museum, who wrote the legislation creating the Trust for Cultural Resources. The team of consultants proposed a package including a $23 million apartment tower, a $17 million museum expansion and a lot of elaborate fiscal calculations that promised that, if all went well, the museum would reach a break-even point.

Private Builders

The package provided for the retention of a private real-estate developer to do the actual building of the condominium tower, which would largely be financed through conventional mortgage sources. The Arlen Realty and Development Corporation, the company whose Olympic Tower on Fifth Avenue is in some ways a model for the Museum of Modern Art project, has been working closely with the museum so far, but it is believed that Arlen has not yet found financing for the tower, and it has not yet signed a formal agreement to proceed as developer—which, if it comes, would legally be signed with the Trust for Cultural Resources, not the museum itself.

No architect has yet been chosen, although the city's architectural community has been suggesting that Kevin Roche, John Dinkeloo and Associates, I. M. Pei and Partners and Mitchell/Giurgola Associates are the leading contenders. Philip Johnson, architect of most of the existing museum building, has been excluded from consideration, as have all of the other architects on the museum's board of trustees.

For the Project

The arguments for the project all center on what Mr. Weinstein calls "taking advantage of what we have." "We don't want to get out of the culture business for the real-estate business," he explained. "But in our air space we have a sleeping asset, and in this way we can put it to work to help keep our cultural facilities alive."

The prime reason for the project, advocates assert, is its ability to strengthen the museum's existing facilities, both by providing sounder financing and by making expansion possible. "We have the most important collection of modern art in the world and no room to show it," said William S. Paley, chairman of the museum's board and chariman of CBS Inc.

More Construction Jobs

Supporters of the project say that the Trust for Cultural Resources plan would not divert any actual tax revenues from the city even though it, rather than the city, would collect tax payments. This, they say, is because the condominium tower would never be built as a more conventional speculative venture. Thus the city would not lose tax revenue as it would if a presently taxable building were converted to tax-exempt status, for example.

Advocates further point out that the project would bring much-needed construction jobs to the city, and that by strengthening the museum, which is one of the city's major attractions for visitors, the economy of the city at large would benefit.

They assert that the success of Olympic Tower indicates a continuing market for luxury condominiums in the neighborhood of Fifth Avenue and the 50's. And they point to the value of the project as a model for other cultural institutions in similar trouble. The legislation would permit other trusts to be set up, but the requirements for them would be strict, and advocates brush off suggestions that trusts would be set up willy-nilly by institutions all over the city and state and that they would thus become major forces in real-estate development.

As as safeguard against cultural institutions assuming control of development through trusts, the legislation requires the mayor, rather than the museum, name the trust's five-member board of trustees, and that no more than one member be associated with the museum.

Against the Project

The project's critics only rarely argue, as might be expected, that the mix of art and commerce is by definition a bad thing; they generally concede the museum's dire straits and agree that some businesslike proposal will be the only way out.

But they do express concern over what, to many, is a particularly high element of risk in this project. They argue that the success of Olympic Tower may have been due more to the involvement of the late Aristotle Onassis as a partner than to the large size of the available market; the recent financial failure of the Galleria condominium tower on East 57th Street bears this out, critics believe, and some suggest that the museum is keeping company with business executives whose idea of risk is a lot looser than its own should be.

"Like an aging belle convinced that she must soon cash in on what nature or circumstance has bestowed upon her, the Modern has taken to flirting with rich, dangerous men—private developers," wrote Suzanne Stephens in an analysis of the project in Artforum magazine.

Trusts Might Be Fronts

Critics have also attacked the Trust for Cultural Resources setup, which many feel shifts excessive power away from conventional planning sources, even with mandated safeguards; some of the legislators debating the issue in Albany said they foresaw the possibility that trusts could be used by private developers as fronts for projects that might otherwise be publicly unacceptable.

The tax exemption for the project is another source of dispute. Crtiics concede that this particular project would never come to pass except under this special mechanism, but they argue that the market for condominium apartments is limited and that if this project is not built, a similar building might be built privately and that it could be able to provide tax income for the city. It is not, critics admit, too likely a possibility—but the tax issue awakened considerable passions in Albany among legislators concerned about the appearance of a provision aiding a museum at a time when the city was closing schools and hospitals, and much of the opposition to the program was, legislators conceded, based on the poor public image that it presented.

The Outlook

An imposing problem concerns, not the legislation itself, but the means by which the museum, in partnership with a real estate developer, would go about bringing the project to pass. The Museum of Modern Art has traditionally presented itself as the institution in the nation most concerned about bringing quality design into everyday life; it had the first architecture and design department of any museum in the United States, and its own building is considered a significant work of modern architecture.

But the museum has never had to build for profit, and there are serious doubts as to whether, in partnership with a private developer, it can maintain the sort of standards that it has proclaimed as necessary. Arlen is not known as much of a patron of serious architecture, and if the museum project comes down to a question of profit above all else, how will it look, critics ask, if the nation's most prominent museum of architecture and design builds a mediocre piece of speculative real estate?

AIMS TO PLEASE The enterprising Kodak Photo Gallery, at the corner of 43d Street on Avenue of the Americas, salutes young American photographers today through Oct. 16 with a display of 300 winning pictures from the 1976 Scholastic/Kodak Photo Awards. The annual competition is held for junior and senior high school students. The admission-free gallery is open to the public Monday from noon to 5 P.M. and Tuesday through Saturday from 9:30 A.M. to 5 P.M.

WINGS OF STRING Tonight is balalaika night at Damrosch Park, Lincoln Center, with a stageful of performers on that exotic-sounding Russian instrument going into action at 8 o'clock. The Balalaika Symphonic Orchestra, which has acquired a loyal following from appearances around the metropolitan area, also happens to be the only band of its kind in the United States.

The free program leans generously toward Russian composers, in addition to vocal solos and other featured instruments against a strumming—string background. The regular conductor, Alexander Kutin, is wielding the baton.

Leonard Slatkin, conductor of the Mostly Mozart Festival Orchestra, at Lincoln Center

Music: Firkusny Plays Rare Mozart

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

Two of the less familiar piano concertos by Mozart were played last night in Alice Tully Hall by Rudolf Firkusny. The occasion was, of course, the annual Mostly Mozart Festival, that indispensable summer series which helps New Yorkers maintain sanity and proportion during the hot summer months.

Less familiar. But that does not mean they are that much less worthy than the more popular ones in the Mozart canon. Indeed, it is hard to see why the Concerto No. 18 in B flat (K. 456) is not on the all-time hit parade. It breathes the spirit of "Le Nozze di Figaro," it has a slow movement that can tear you apart, it has effective virtuoso figurations and the cunning construction that Mozart alone could bring to the form.

If the D major Concerto (No. 16, K. 451) is not on this level, it too is a constructional masterpiece and a lighthearted romp. It also has some musicological importance. Mozart filled out a few measures of the solo part for his sister, and those measures give an important clue about the way Mozart himself fleshed out the skeleton of notes on the printed page that has come down to us.

Leonard Slatkin conducted the smal orchestra, and provided strong support for Mr. Firkusny. It always is a pleasure to hear the Mozart piano concertos played by a skilled artist with greatly reduced forces. Years back, Rudolf Serkin and Alexander Schneider collaborated on this kind of Mozart, and it was to many a revelation. Up to then, most Mozart concertos had been played to the accompaniment of a full, romantic symphony orchestra. Now one could admire the taextures, balances, byplay of piano against orchestra.

So it was last night, under Mr. Kirkusny's skilled fingers and the lively conducting of Mr. Slatkin. Mr. Firkusny gave both concertos a limpid performance, but that does not mean the strength of the music was slighted. Nor the virtuosity. Quite properly, Mr. Firkusny made a big thing out of the exhibitionistic passages. Mozart himself did when he played.

There was also a rare unanimity between soloist and conductor in certain textual problems. As often as not, conductor and soloist in a Mozart concerto go their own musicological way. But last night, trills started on the same notes from piano and orchestra; cadenza points were observed; ideas about tempo coincided (except, perhaps, in the last movement of K. 451, where the conductor might have wanted a slightly slower pace).

It was very elegant and forceful playing, from soloist and orchestra. Mr. Slatkin is a young, talented conductor with a good sense of rhythm, an ability to shape a phrase with personality, and the inner strength to make an orchester follow his wishes. He started the evening with three movebents from Beethoven's "Prometheus," and that was pleasant. Usually only the orchestra is heard, but there is much lovely music elsewhere in the score.

Closing the program was Haydn's "Drum Roll" Symphony—No. 103 in E flat—and again Mr. Slatkin did not disappoint. He led a refined, well-turned performance. The important thing was that there also was red blood to the interpretation. Mr. Slatkin is a musician of strong convictions, and this "Drum Roll" reflected a conductor who had his own ideas about the music.

Christoph Eschenbach at Piano at Mostly Mozart

By JOHN ROCKWELL

Christoph Eschenbach, the German pianist, appended a Mostly Mozart recital Sunday night at Alice Tully Hall to his previous week's four appearances as soloist and conductor there. It was an always interesting if not always emotionally winning affair.

Speaking generally, Mr. Eschenbach falls into the category of modern young pianists who espouse an analytically correct, cool linearity in their playing. But what redeems him from the more clinical extremes of that category are a certain contained expressiveness within that style and a calculated willingness to indulge in melodrama when the situation seems to call for it. The trouble is that on the basis of Sunday's program, he's better at delicacies than Romantic theatrics.

What this meant in specific terms was that he played most of the program better than he played the first two movements of Beethoven's "Pathétique" Sonata and the opening Mozart Sonata No. 12 in F (K. 332).

The Mozart suffered because a crystalline approach demands crystalline playing, and Mr. Eschenbach's fingers hadn't warmed up enough to propel the runs in a properly purling fashion. In the succeeding Mozart Andante in F (K. 616), originally m[illegible]t for a small mechanical organ, he caught the static quality of the music neatly, and then in Mozart's Sonata No. 13 in B flat (K. 333)—and in the last movement of the "Pathétique" and the concluding "Moonlight" Sonata of Beethoven, for that matter—he delivered a most persuasive case for his approach.

That approach consists of a remarkably sensitive, perceptive ability to accent harmonic changes without underlining them crudely (Mozart's adventuresomeness in this regard has rarely seemed so piquantly apparent), and to hint at the presence of emotion without really giving way to it. For artists like Mr. Eschenbach, to swoon is to sin.

But aristocratic reserve—a reserve that heightens some sorts of sensuality through its very restraint isn't appropriate to all kinds of music. Mr. Eschenbach apparently realizes this, and so he subjected the first movement of the "Pathétique" to marked extremes of tempo and dynamics. But he didn't project the expansiveness and the passion that tradition has primed us for here, and his Adagio cantabile simply wasn't songful enough.

Executive Director Quits Arts Council

Kent Barwick has resigned as executive director of the New York State Council on the Arts. Mr. Barwick was appointed to the position 10 months ago by Joan K. Davidson, who resigned as chairman of the council last week.

Kitty Carlisle Hart, who succeeded Mrs. Davidson, announced the resignation last night, saying that she had asked Mr. Barwick to remain with the council until early September.

"Mr. Barwick has made a noteworthy contribution to the arts in New York State during his tenure, and it is my intention that the benefits of his efforts not be lost," she said.

Mrs. Hart also announced the formation of a committee composed of council members to "undertake an immediate and comprehensive survey of qualified candidates for the position of executive director."

Talks Are Held On Music Hall

The chairman of the State Mediation Board met yesterday with representatives of Local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians and the management of Radio City Music Hall in an effort to reach a contract agreement that would avert a threatened Sept. 8 shutdown of the 6,000-seat theater.

Vincent D. McDonnell, the board chairman, reported last night after the four-hour meeting at the Music Hall, "the two sides are still stalemated." He said he would confer again with the musicians later in the week.

The Music Hall management has said that it lost $1.3 million last year and that it had to have a wage freeze and manpower savings with the musicians, the Rockettes and the stagehands or it would shut permanently.

Black Tympanist Sues on Coast Job

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 16 (UPI)—Elayne Jones, a black tympanist denied tenure by the San Francisco Symphony, has filed a $1.5 million suit in Superior Court seeking restoration of her job.

The suit asserted that she was illegally discriminated against because of her sex and race. Defendants were the symphony association, Musicians Union Local 6 and seven members of the symphony players committee who voted against her tenure.

Miss Jones said blacks and women were systematically excluded from symphony orchestras across the country. In the San Francisco Symphony, she said, there are 22 women out of 100 players, and there have been only two blacks in its history.

After she played a year with the symphony, a players committee voted in 1974 to deny tenure. In settlement of a suit filed then, she was allowed to play an additional year and was given another vote by an expanded players committee. But the new committee also voted to deny tenure, and the then music director, Seiji Ozawa, concurred.

pter registration ahead as state ficials, mostly to recapture the llion voters who ff the rolls since the last Presidential election in 1972. But already the new mail registration law appears to be changing the mix of the state's voters in two significant ways.

First, a substantial proportion of the new voters in New York City—as many as 60 percent, by some informed estimates—are black and Puerto Rican, an important development when little more than a third of this group now votes.

Secondly, in the area of the state outside New York City, mail registration is bringing in record numbers of voters who decline to enroll in a party. Independents make up about one-third of the 81,000 non-New York City voters who registered between last December and last month, and in fact are the single largest category of such voters. By comparison, independents make up only a little more than 10 percent of the state's 7.18 million voters.

This trend away from party enrollment does not seem to be borne out in New York City, where Ben Dolen, executive director of the Board of Elections, said that roughly 60 percent of the new mail registrations were Democrats. The city has not yet compiled accurate figures on party enrollment, however.

Since one of the major election law efforts of the 1976 Legislature was a law making new voters eligible to vote in primary elections if they enrolled 60 days in advance—instead of the previous 11 months—it was considered ironic that so many new voters were making themselves ineligible to vote in party primaries by refusing to enroll in a party.

Public Disillusion

Explanations for the upstate trend range from public disillusion with the political system to such a simple matter as the inconspicuous location, in the lower left-hand corner of the mail registration form, of the place where the voter checks off the party he wishes to enroll in.

Street-corner registration drives have been the rule in recent years, but had made few inroads into black and Puerto Rican neighborhoods. One obstacle under the old drives was that the tables had to be staffed by deputy registrars representing each of the major parties. Republicans in these neighborhoods are scarce and were seldon available for the purpose.

But the new law places no restrictions on who can pass out the mail registration forms. About 60 Harlem churches cooperated with a Harlem-based voter drive, the Citizens' Voter Education Campaign, in distributing the forms after worship services.

Probably Correct

The chairman of the drive, State Senator Carl McCall, Democrat of Manhattan, believes that about 60 percent of the 200,000 voters who have registered by mail in New York City this year are black and Puerto Rican. Mrs. Dolen at the Board of Elections said that judging by the new voters' addresses, this estimate is probable.

Among other groups planning extensive registration drives are Jimmy Carter's Presidential campaign organization, which claims to have registered 10,000 new voters already this summer, and a new group called the Committee for Two Million, sponsored jointly by the Democratic State Committee and Governor Carey's office.

The name refers to the two million missing voters since 1972. The group plans to focus heavily on college students and has gotten permission from a number of college presidents to put mail registration forms inside the registration packets that students receive on the first day of school.

Chess: Mecking Takes Manila Event With Loss of Only One Game

By ROBERT BYRNE

Henrique Mecking of Brazil won the interzonal tournament in Manila, which, like the Biel interzonal, qualified its top three prize-winners for the candidate matches to determine a challenger for the world championship.

Mecking lost only one game—to Boris Spassky, the former world champion—while winning eight and drawing 10. From the third round on, he was never out of the lead, although Vlastimil Hort of Czechoslovakia pursued him closely the whole way, pulling even from time to time.

Hort shared second prize with Lev Polugaevsky of the Soviet Union, each scoring 12½-6½. They were not sure of their qualification for the candidates matches until the last round, when Vitaly Zeshkovsky of the Soviet Union, a half-point behind, struggled seriously but could not obtain more than a draw with Ludek Pachman of West Germany.

Thus, Hort's draw with Zoltan Ribli of Hungary and Polugaevsky's draw with Lubomir Kavalek of the United States kept Zeshkovsky at a crucial distance.

In the eighth round, Mecking revived a seldom-used anti-Najdorf system to defeat Miguel Quinteros of Argentina.

Ever since the Bobby Fischer-Spassky match in Iceland in 1972, 10 P-KN4 has gone into eclipse in favor of 10 B-Q3. Still, there is nothing wrong with the line leading to the gambit 13 P-B5, and in any case, Black's only safe course is to return the pawn with 14 . . . N-K4 and 15 . . . Q-Q1.

After 22 BxB, RxB, the white knight exerted strong pressure in the center, making it difficult for Black to maneuver freely. Therefore, accepting a second gambit by 23 . . . BxP would have been hazardous, so the defense 24 R-R1, B-N4; 25 Q-R2, P-R3 had some chance to hold.

Quinteros clearly stood worse after the simplification 23 . . . N-B5; 24 P-R5, BxN; 25 RxB, and after 25 . . . PxP; 26 QxP, Mecking got an open king rook file anyway. Naturally, the king pawn was taboo, since 26 . . . RxP?; 27 R-R1, Q-Q2; 28 N-B6 cleans up.

Mecking's 29 P-N3 barred the retreat 29 . . . N-K4 because 30 N-K7, Q-K1; 31 Q-N5 threatens both 32 NxR and 32 Q-B6 mate. Consequently, Quinteros plunged into 29 . . . N-R6 check, but after 30 K-N2, he could not rescue his knight with 30 . . . P-N5; 31 NxP, N-N4; 32 P-R4, Q-N2 check, 33 P-K5, N-B6; 34 R-Q3, N-K5; 35 Q-B5, QxP check; 36 QxQ check, PxQ; 37 R-K3, yielding White a won end game.

Nevertheless, going into a piece-down ending after 34 RxN was hopeless, and, although Quinteros sealed his move 41 . . . P-R8 check, he resigned before the game was to be resumed.

Bridge: Deceptive Play Is Usually One Most Satisfying to Experts

By ALAN TRUSCOTT

If you ask an expert to name the bid or play that gives him most satisfaction you might expect a number of answers: a subtle bidding inference in a competitive auction; the climax of a series of a carefully planned technical bidding sequence; an outrageous psychic that leaves the opponents reeling; a plan of play that saves an apparently hopeless contract; or the execution of a rare and difficult squeeze.

The most likely answer, however, is the deceptive play in defense that diverts the declarer from an obvious line of play that is due to succeed. The best example in this category this year was reported recently from a tournament in California.

It is clear that six spades is an excellent contract and North-South had no trouble getting there after an artificial opening two-club bid. North began with an artificial response of two diamonds, concealing his strength as many experts do with a positive hand. After his partner had shown a powerful spade suit by bidding them twice, he used Blackwood before settling in six spades.

Singleton Heart Led

Assuming that West does not solve the declarer's problems with a club lead, South has two chances. He can try for a heart trick and if this fails he can fall back on the club finesse. It is easy to see that as the cards lie the heart play fails, but the reserve play in club succeeds.

But when West led his singleton heart, Mike Smolen of Los Angeles; as East, found a way to make South think that he could score a heart trick and therefore did not need a club finesse. When South played the heart jack from dummy, Smolen had summed up the situation quickly.

He knew that his partner's lead was a singleton, and that he would win the first trick. He also knew that his partner held no honor cards with any trick-taking potential.

Club Eight Returned

Smolen's solution was to win the first trick with the heart ace instead of the queen and fire back the club eight. He had made South a present of a heart trick, but it was a Greek gift. Naturally, the declarer did not choose to risk a club finesse for he was already sure of 12 tricks—or so he thought.

He grabbed his club ace and cashed the K-A of spades to end in the dummy.

But when he then confidently threw his club queen on the heart king—"knowing" that West held the heart queen—West produced his remaining trump to defeat the slam. The Machiavellian Smolen collected 100 points and a dirty look from a shaken declarer.

AUTO WORKERS URGE MORE PAID DAYS OFF

DETROIT Aug. 16 (AP)—The United Automobile Workers proposed today that employees of the big three auto makers be given a certain number of days off at full pay to reduce working time and create new jobs for laid-off workers.

The union's first specific proposal of how to shorten time spent in the plants was given simultaneously to company bargainers at General Motors, Ford and Chrysler.

The paid days off would be mandatory and in addition to holidays, vacations and other days off that workers are already entitled to at full pay. However, the plan did not say how many days off each worker should receive yearly, nor did it indicate how many additional jobs it would create.

The industry has expressed concern over any plan to reduce work time, saying it might prevent the plants from operating at maximum capacity and force labor costs up sharply, resulting in substantial price increases for consumers.

However, the union said in a written statement, "This does not require increased plant or equipment nor does it decrease the companies' ability to use capital because the number at work on any given day would be unchanged."

Memorial Day on Wheels

BORN ON THE FOURTH OF JULY. By Ron Kovic. 208 pages. McGraw-Hill $7.95.

When Ron Kovic, the author of "Born on the Fourth of July," appeared in his wheelchair on the rostrum of the Democratic National Convention this year to nominate an "amnesty candidate" for the Vice Presidency, the television cameras panned the delegates' faces. Some — the younger ones, mostly—were visibly moved, some dutifully attentive. But on the faces of many was barely veiled hostility, as though Mr. Kovic's long hair, his Movement rhetoric had loosed seething memories of Chicago in 1968. But it was not 1968; there was no need of Mayor Richard J. Daley's police, no need to harden themselves against their kids running amok. Yet the appearance of this voice from the past was sufficiently incongruous amid the Jimmy Carter love barbecue to be a little jolting.

Mr. Kovic's last appearance at a national political convention hadn't been so orderly. In 1972, as one of a group of Vietnam Veterans Against the War, he had traveled to Miami Beach and wangled floor credentials for the night of President Nixon's acceptance speech. He bluffed his way down front, made shameless plays for television attention and got himself interviewed, hassled back the security guards who were hassling him (I'm a Vietnam veteran and I fought in the war! Did you fight in the war!") and finally, with two comrades, chanted, Stop the bombing!" while Mr. Nixon spoke. At that point the security guards wheeled the vets off, but not before one delegate, shouting "Traitor!" spit full in Mr. Kovic's face. Mr. Kovic should have then learned that just because you are a crippled vet, the world doesn't owe you a hearing. After all, in a previous antiwar demonstration in California, an undercover policeman posing as a demonstrator had suddenly declared Mr. Kovic under arrest, dumped him out of his wheelchair and soundly beat him up, while delivering appropriate patriotic sentiments.

Programmed on L.I.

Ron Kovic had come a long way since he was born on July 4, 1946, to blue-collar parents in Massapequa, L.I. Like a lot of American boys, he grew up programmed just crazy enough to think war was killing gloriously for your country, as the movies showed it, that patriotism was John F. Kennedy telling you not to ask what your country could do for you, that Vietnam and anti-Communism and serving one's country were all bound up together and that the Marine Corps builds men. In 1964, at the age of 18, he joined up.

Sometimes in the book he speaks of himself in the third person, sometimes in the first; he reaches back and forth in time, yet always approaching the ultimate agony. The book begins a few moments after he is hit; much later we learn he had been wounded twice, the first, the "million-dollar wound" that would make him a homeward-bound hero and that exhilarates him so that he keeps firing, standing out there alone while the bullets fly about him. Then, "a loud crack went off next to my right ear as a 30-caliber slug tore through my right shoulder, blasted through my lung, and smashed my spinal cord to pieces . . . All I could feel was the worthlessness of dying right here in this place at this moment for nothing."

After that he was transported to a field hospital, a charnel house of horribly wounded men and frightened teen-agers crying, "Mother!" Through the shock and pain (a medic demands his name, rank and serial number before giving him morphine) he can only try to live; much later, back in the States in a military hospital, he gradually apprehends his true condition, which is only partly alive

After doing time in some rat-ridden Veterans Administration hospitals he returned home, where his father had built with his own hands, a ramp for a wheelchair. He drank himself into insensibility every night, spent aimlessly his ample disability benefits, tried college and dropped out and finally headed to California. A priest in Vietnam had told him, "Sometimes no one will want to hear what you're going through. You are going to have to learn to carry a great burden and most of your learning will be done alone." The learning was mostly alone at first, and hard. He describes indelibly being put on display by the local American Legion at a Memorial Day parade; there was no cheering; the people lining the streets stared at him silently, and then he was placed on the speakers' platform and not asked to say a word. In a bitter poem, he calls himself "Memorial Day on wheels."

Shouting and Shaking

Salvation of a sort comes in California, where he hooks up with a veterans-against-the-war movement, and makes speeches, displaying his useless body, as he once put in it on the line for his country. "Here!" he screams to passers-by at a demonstration. "Look at the war!" That is the demonstration at which he is beaten up; afterwards he withdraws and lives alone, thinking that "they" had made a "thing of him . . . a young thing to run through the meat grinder" and of how he had forgotten "how to be a nice person."

Once again the fraternity of his fellow vets lifts him out, and he scores his moment of glory, shouting down the President. And afterward sits in his chair shaking and crying. At the end of the book, his memories of Vietnam wind down, resolve themselves into the time when, a gung-ho sergeant, he accidentally killed a corporal in his own outfit; another time when his outfit fired by mistake on a hut full of civilians, killing them all, and his last moment of Audie Murphy glory before the crack of the bullet that snaps his life forever, a green shoot broken off the branch.

The images of Ron Lovic's life are realized in a simple indelible procession: they are there, impersonal, classic and timeless. He has made his life, his body stand for all the young lives and bodies who were hurt in that war: "Here! Look at the war!" As we rapidly forget, let's look briefly, just one more time.

'Moderate Alternative' . . .

It may be fashionable to deprecate the importance of party platforms. True, if a platform is regarded as either a contract between a party and the electorate or as a dependable forecast of immediate Government policy, such skepticism is well based.

In reality, a platform is a barometer of a party's intellectual and political mood. It is also a party's judgment of the nation's needs and rival pressures and, finally, a symbolic statement of aspirations. In these terms, a platform is a significant political event.

The platform to be voted on at the Republican National Convention in Kansas City tonight begins with a sharp attack on its Democratic counterpart, adopted in New York last month, and then describes itself as "a responsive and moderate alternative." It is moderate in that it fails to reflect completely the immoderate ideological passions of North Carolina's Senator Jesse Helms and other outriders who have been harrying the party's flanks.

By any other standard, it is a remarkably conservative document. Indeed, it coherently and consistently articulates a right-wing view of the nation's needs. One can disagree with that view but one can hardly accuse the G.O.P. platform writers of evasiveness. This is a forthright statement.

The party deals with tax reform, for example, by urging the enlargement of certain existing loopholes and the creation of new ones. It urges new systems of accelerated depreciation, an end to taxation of dividends, and tax credits for parents who pay college tuition bills. These and similar proposals would enormously widen the budget deficit. Since the platform also reaffirms the traditional Republican belief in a balanced budget, the contradiction is reconciled by a demand for cuts in expenditures.

The platform is equally unequivocal in endorsing constitutional amendments that would restrict abortions, permit nonsectarian prayers in the public schools, and ban court-ordered school busing. It condemns gun control, even through so mild a measure as registration of firearms, asserting that mandatory sentences for gun-related crimes are "the only effective solution."

Endorsing catastrophic illness protection for all, the platform urges that only private health insurance plans be used to achieve this objective. Similarly, it relies upon the private sector as the major force in meeting urban needs and relieving unemployment, condemning even action by the Federal Government as employer of last resort for the jobless.

The platform's language concerning the environment and natural resources reveals a strong bias in favor of the claims of private economic interests. Land-use planning is described as "a unique responsibility" of state and local government; public lands should be kept open for mineral exploration and for mining; clear-cutting is specifically endorsed as a technique for the management of the national forests.

. . . 'Moral' Substitute

Although there are differences in style and emphasis between President Ford and Ronald Reagan, their shared conservatism enabled their adherents to reach agreement on the domestic planks of the platform. Only the deep hostility of some Reagan supporters toward the Equal Rights Amendment is likely to produce a serious floor fight on a domestic issue.

Foreign policy is another matter. The platform as drafted in committee provides a relatively sober, unexceptional defense of the policies of the Ford-Nixon period —although both Presidents as well as Secretary of State Kissinger remain unnamed ghostly figures. There are strong endorsements for continuance of the NATO alliance, the U.S. military presence in South Korea, close relations with Canada and Japan, and the longstanding commitment to Israel's defense.

But this language clearly fails to satisfy the ultranationalists and unreconstructed cold warriors who have rallied to Mr. Reagan's banner. In their view of the world, a foreign policy based on a careful defense of discernible national interests is a paltry, defeatist enterprise. They believe that America's will must prevail in every disputed issue, great or small. Moreover, they envisage this country as the moral guardian of mankind, required to unshackle every captive and right every wrong.

To express these emotions, Mr. Reagan and his associates plan to offer a substitute foreign policy plank. Interestingly enough, they have chosen to shy away from specific but spurious issues such as the future of the Panama Canal and the relative balance of military power between the United States and the Soviet Union that Mr. Reagan raised in the primaries.

Instead, the Reagan forces have put forward language raising symbolic "moral" issues such as President Ford's snub of Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn and the signing of the Helsinki accord.

There is irony in this proposal. Several of the delegates sponsoring this "Morality in Foreign Policy" plank were active in the Platform Committee trying to put the party on record as accepting white minority rule of predominantly black countries in southern Africa. In practice, their commitment to morality, liberty and the rule of law in world affairs is something less than universal.

The Yunich Shuffle

Several weeks ago, David L. Yunich, chairman of the deficit-ridden Metropolitan Transportation Authority, startled students of transit finance by predicting that the 50-cent fare could be maintained through the end of 1977. The prediction was surprising because only last April the M.T.A. chairman was warning that the fare would have to be raised to 65 cents by next spring unless alternative financing were found to make up for $125 million in Federal subsidies formerly advanced under the abandoned "Beame shuffle."

Chairman Yunich credited the turnabout in M.T.A. fortunes to "a superior management job" which, he said, had achieved savings of $113 million during the past year. But that did not really appear to solve the mystery of the disappearing deficit because the chairman had already claimed $100 million in savings back in April when he was still sounding the alarm for fiscal troubles ahead.

Perhaps the secret to the Yunich alchemy lies in the announcement last Saturday that the Transit Authority will be eliminating an additional 215 daily train runs in the subway system as of Aug. 30, making a total of 855 runs dropped since early 1975. Cutting trains is certainly one way of cutting costs. It's also a way to drive people back into cars and taxis and kill mass transit.

Chairman Yunich has boasted that New Yorkers have absorbed service cuts to date "without a whimper." It is time long-suffering transit patrons were heard, loud and clear—not only on behalf of more and better service but for the broad-based regional tax that is needed to make such service possible.

Colombo Rhetoric

It would be easy to be cynical about the fifth summit meeting of so-called nonaligned nations in Colombo this week. As usual, the "nonaligned" will include Fidel Castro's Cuba and Kim Il Sung's North Korea, among other dubious claimants. The rhetoric and resolutions are likely to be excessive, one-sided, all too familiar. The demands on the richer nations will be the same as those made at every meeting of the poorer countries, whether they convene as the nonaligned, the Group of 77 (now 112) or the third world.

Critics will say that the host, Sri Lanka (formerly Ceylon), could have put to better use the $50 million spent just to prepare for the assembly of 4,000 delegates from 85 member and 25 observer nations. It might have used a $280,000 Parliamentary appropriation to provide care and housing for Colombo's army of cripples and beggars, rather than to move them temporarily out of sight into "rehabilitation" camps outside the capital.

And yet, much of the discussion at Colombo will undoubtedly transcend the hypocrisies and focus on real problems that, in an increasingly interdependent world, inevitably affect the prosperity and well-being of the richer as well as the poorer countries: control and pricing of raw materials; conditions of trade; the necessity for rescheduling debt service for developing countries whose balance-of-payments deficits reached $40 billion last year; the crisis confronting the World Bank's International Development Association, mostly because the United States, by far its biggest contributor, is now seriously in default on its pledges.

It is clearly impossible to meet all of the demands of the developing countries. But neither can the richer countries, in light of their own long-run interests and their stake in international peace and stability, ignore those demands. The rhetoric of Colombo will be heard again at the United Nations General Assembly next month. The task for the United States and other industrialized nations is to help sort out what is reasonable and give it more serious attention than in the past.

Foreign Banks in the U.S.

In attempting to equalize competition between American and foreign banks operating in the United States, a bill recently passed by the House of Representatives could provoke reprisals on United States banks operating overseas. The issue for the Senate to consider is whether a seemingly tidy administrative reform might stir up more problems than it solves.

Foreign bank operations in this country have grown at a spectacular rate over the past decade; 74 foreign banks operate 181 United States offices. Their net assets total $41 billion, compared with less than $7 billion ten years ago.

These banks enjoy very real regulatory advantages, including the right to provide full banking services in more than one state and investment facilities denied to American banks. The International Banking Act of 1976 would enforce Federal supervision—as opposed to the present state regulation—over foreign banks, restrict their interstate branching and securities business and require maintenance of reserves, against their deposits, with the Federal Reserve System.

The other side of the picture, however, is the far greater growth of United States banking activity abroad. Some 125 American banks operate 750 foreign offices, with total assets of about $160 billion. These banks are allowed a wider degree of latitude in their financial operations than under domestic regulation, consistent with the more relaxed banking practices in other countries.

The fear of these banks, which include the largest financing institutions for multinational trade, is that any move to restrict the foreign banks here would invite retaliation from foreign governments—the West German Banking Federation has already uttered guarded threats toward that end. Trade investment and capital flows could suffer in the process, without significant compensating benefit. It is the smaller American banks which favor the equalizing legislation—yet as a practical matter, few of the foreign banks engage in the type of retail business which is the smaller banks' mainstay.

Many of the issues raised in this bill relate more broadly to controversies about the domestic banking system—Federal versus state regulation, interstate operations and broader investment activities. A complete overhaul of the crazy-quilt regulatory system over this country's banking structure has been under study for more than a year, led by the House banking committee. A careful weighing of the priorities in this complex effort has yet to demonstrate that a partial—and potentially provocative—reform of foreign banking regulation is necessarily the best place to start.

Letters to the Editor

Paying for Government We Need

To the Editor:

D. H. Lawrence is quoted as having once observed, "Let there be a parliament of men and women for the careful and gradual unmaking of laws."

The present New York State Legislature just enacted a law leveling at least an extra $1 million in local taxes on taxpayers in our smaller and generally poorer towns, by mandating town justices off the town board in towns of the second class (800 in the state relative to population). This was done against the recommendation of this association (which represents 97 percent of the 930 towns of the state), and against the advice of State Comptroller Arthur Levitt and of Secretary of State Mario Cuomo's Division of Community Affairs.

Then, this same Legislature just passed a law to mandate that the taxpayers of the state pay all court expenses of all the courts of the state except those in towns and villages. So, the 8 million people of the state who live in our growing towns are mandated not only to pay the rising costs of their own courts (plus, in towns of the second class, the extra $1 million mentioned above), but also the entire costs not only of New York City's court costs but also all court costs of all the 61 other cities of the state, plus all of the court costs of the lavish county and state court systems, as well. Unbelievable!

The above speaks so clearly for itself that it seems hardly necessary to note additionally that by the latest official report, our town and village courts are doing some $19 million worth of business, yearly, the preponderance of which reverts to the state.

Then this same Legislature overnight voted Constitutional "court reform" measures hastily patched together after disgruntled political compromise. This will cost our innocent, already overtaxed state taxpayers unspecified additional hard sums of tax dollars.

Let's unmake some laws. Let's pay only for the government we need and want. Above all, don't be fooled by the familiar technique of labeling a proposal "reform." Just because some bill drafter touts a measure "reform" does not mean it is wise, economical, efficient or in your best interests. Too often have we voters been fooled by this cunning device.

For an Arms Authority

To the Editor:

The answer to C. L. Sulzberger's question "Are we—or is our strategy—MAD?" in your Aug. 4 edition, is the latter. Not only is our strategy mad, but Mr. Sulzberger's own article testifies poignantly to the human and moral bankruptcy of our whole approach to the mad arms race.

"Mere survival should be the paramount issue of this autumn's election," says he, after implying that the U.S. must vastly increase its military spending to keep up with those Russians. To what end, I ask?

Unlimited competition in nuclear bombs, planes, ships and missiles will get us nowhere. It will only bankrupt, in every sense, both the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. The only road to national security is marked "World Security System," as President John F. Kennedy told us back in 1963.

Down this road only will we find the resources to begin realistically to solve our interdependent problems of food, population, environment, development, and human rights. Wise Russians should be just as eager as wise Americans, and wise Chinese, to find this road.

Is our country so lacking in leaders and citizens of vision and realism that we must remain locked in a futile battle for "Mutual Assured Destruction" rather than committing ourselves seriously and persistently to negotiating a treaty establishing an International Arms Control and Security Authority? Only such an agency could provide a rational system of worldwide security under law and assure genuine national security for each nation and its citizens.

A New Danger for Hard-Pressed Cities

To the Editor:

Legislation is now being considered in Congress which, if enacted, might considerably increase the financial burdens of New York City and generate new pressure to invest more of the municipal pension funds in city bonds, a most unwise method of meeting the city's financial crises. The bill in question is H.R. 10210, as passed by the House of Representatives last month. It would require the city and other municipalities throughout the country to join their state unemployment insurance (U.I.) systems as taxpayers or benefit-cost reimbursers.

As the recession developed after 1973 and municipalities increasingly encountered budget problems, a great many public employees were laid off without any U.I. coverage. Congress, however, aided them through Supplementary Unemployment Assistance (S.U.A.) payments—in effect a Federal unemployment relief system without a means test. But H.R. 10210 would allow S.U.A. to expire and substitute the mandatory coverage under U.I.

Such an extension of U.I. coverage would subject New York City and other municipalities to unemployment benefit costs which under S.U.A. are costing the county $1.5 billion in a two-year period. With an already greatly unbalanced budget, where would the city find the millions of dollars needed for the U.I. payments? The obvious and unfortunate answer is the pension funds. Great pressure would arise to raid them still more.

Consequently, we strongly oppose the passage of H.R. 10210 insofar as it deals with U.I. coverage for municipal employees during the present crisis. With urban communities in financial straits, the proper solution—as posed in a number of pending congressional bills—is the continuation of Federal financing through the supplementary unemployment assistance system. It is decidedly premature to shift these burdens to local governments in the proximate future.

A Word About Corn

To the Editor:

Just two brief comments relating to your Aug. 8 editorial on corn. First, Mangelsdorf established as long ago as 1958 that teosinte could not be the ancestor of corn. It is almost certainly the offspring, resulting from a hybridization of already domesticated corn with a wild variety called tripsacum (see Mangelsdorf, "Ancestor of Corn," Science, cxxiii, Washington, 1958). Second, you declined to speculate as to corn's earliest appearance, which I think leaves your readers with unduly foggy notions as to where and when, especially since there are two relatively clear dates: (1) a core taken from the Valley of Mexico contains pollen grains clearly indicating the existence of wild maize at a depth of 200 feet in deposits that are at least 80,000 years old; (2) in Bat Cave in New Mexico have been found charred cobs of a primitive variety of domesticated maize among remains from the pre-pottery Desert Culture dating to about 250 B.C. (see M. Coe, Mexico, p. 49).

Since Gerald Ford has never actively supported extensive social legislation, the conservative defiance of his claim to the nomination as the incumbent reveals how deeply split the party really is. If liberal Republicans like Senators Charles Percy and Charles Mathias had sought the nomination instead of withdrawing in the interest of a unified moderate-liberal effort, the party battle would have been even more ideologically divisive than it is today.

Unlike the Democratic Party, ideological divisions within the G.O.P. are accentuated by regional coalitions which reinforce them. In 1948 and 1952 the more conservative candidate, Senator Robert Taft, drew his strongest delegate support from the South and the Midwest. Gov. Thomas E. Dewey and Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, the moderate-liberal candidates, were backed by a coalition of Eastern and Western Republicans.

This pattern of the liberal East and West allied against the conservative South and Midwest first weakened in 1964. The nomination of Senator Barry Goldwater heralded the rise of a new "Sunbelt" alliance between Southern and Western Republicans. With no outstanding moderate candidate, the Midwestern wing of the party remained largely uncommitted or pledged to favorite sons while the East rallied around Henry Cabot Lodge, William Scranton, and Nelson Rockefeller. This year's delegate count shows Gerald Ford benefiting from a moderate alliance of the East and Midwest, and Ronald Reagan supported by the same Sunbelt partnership of the South and West which backed Barry Goldwater.

Thus over the last 25 years, the East and South have remained notably constant in their liberal-conservative attachments while the West and Midwest have switched ideological sides, the former veering sharply to the right and the latter emerging as a more moderate force within the party. This pattern is not confined to convention delegates. According to the results of a New York Times/CBS national poll in June, on some 20 political issues, ranging from détente to welfare to busing, Eastern Republicans held more liberal views than Southern Republicans, but Westerners were consistently the most conservative and Midwesterners the most liberal.

It is the ideological division which is paramount, though, and not the regional appeal of favorite son candidates. This spring Ford suffered defeats in several of the more conservative Midwestern states, and prominent Republican Senators from the West failed to win election as Ford delegates from their home states. Furthermore, the 1976 split was closely foreshadowed at the 1972 Republican convention by the roll-call vote on whether to reform the delegate apportionment formula for 1976: East and Midwest Republicans gave the strongest support to the reform while the South and West solidly vetoed it. Many large and small states cast votes which were contrary to their self-interests in terms of delegate seats, choosing to vote instead according to their ideological loyalties.

Political parties have relied on two principal means for controlling fractious competition in nomination contests: often they turn to candidates who are such likely winners that rival forces are persuaded to unite behind the prospect of victory, or they turn to candidates who can bridge the gap between contending factions.

For the Democratic Party, Jimmy Carter had the extraordinary virtue of being at once a winner and a bridge builder. He acquired an image of electability which disarmed ideological enemies, and he demonstrated in the primaries and the convention a rare ability to appeal to diverse constituencies. This helped to unify, at least temporarily, a party still divided between its left, right and center wings.

In the postwar Republican Party, when one thinks of a candidate who can unify competing factions through his image of electability, the name of Dwight Eisenhower comes to mind. However, there are no Eisenhowers available in 1976 to soothe battle wounds in the G.O.P.

As for moderating factional squabbles by spanning the range of ideology, few politicians were more masterful than Richard Nixon. His success in winning nomination at five of the last six Republican conventions, in a party with such persistent ideological splits, attests to his ability to paint himself as a "Man for All Factions." When first nominated as Vice President in 1952, Nixon had established a record as both an anti-Communist crusader and a moderate to liberal on other domestic and foreign-policy issues. In 1968, he wooed Eastern liberals by negotiating a moderate platform with Rockefeller and attracted the Southern conservatives with promises on civil rights policy. The result was that he captured at least one-third of the delegates from every region at the 1968 convention.

This week marks the first time in a quarter century that Richard Nixon will not be shaping events in person at a Republican National Convention. But his presence will still be felt. In no small way, the motivating force behind the conservatives' challenge in 1976 is their sense of being betrayed by the liberal policies and unprincipled deceit of a President they ardently supported. Too many of their gains from 1964 have been lost. The conservatives are determined not to be tripped again.

In a year when the Republican chances in November look very slim, the real issue at stake in Kansas City is not so much the nomination prize itself as what will be the future direction of the Republican Party and who will control it.

Gary Orren teaches political science at Harvard University and is writing a book on the 1976 election.

Rituals in Kansas City

By Tom Wicker

KANSAS CITY, Aug. 16—"Delegates who have always wanted to see a big-time newsman up close can get an eyeful almost anytime, day or night, by wandering around the lobby of the Muehlebach Hotel," says a story in the Delegate Special, which is being published here by the President Ford Committee.

Like any good newspaper, the Delegate Special insists on pinpoint accuracy. The big time newsmen in the lobby, the Special explained, "are the fellows lining the walls, comparing notes, while their eyes continually sweep the scene looking for a VIP who might have a fresh bit of gossip. They are easily distinguished from the politicians, who generally do not wear the traditional rumpled suit of the political journalist." Well, Republican politicians, anyway.

It's not clear how many Republicans actually want to see a big-time newsman up close, but those who do will not have to go as far as the Muehlebach lobby. Throw a well-gnawed barbecued rib bone up in the air in Kansas City and it will hit a newsman, big-time or otherwise, on the way down. (It is true that he—or she—will almost certainly be comparing notes, usually with another journalist.)

All hotel lobbies are festooned with television cables, and the ubiquitous cameras, like giant, three-legged warrior ants, stare with red insistent eyes from every corner and corridor. Authorities say there's a reporter here for every delegate, and that doesn't count editors, publishers, columnists and other supertargets. Space for press, radio and television takes up most of Municipal Auditorium and all of the Governors' Exhibition Hall, while the convention itself is confined to Kemper Arena, a glorified basketball court. There are enough tape recorders on hand to sustain the Japanese economy, and—eat your heart out, Ben Hecht!—not a few reporters here are filing their stories by punching a computer.

Save the computers, none of this is much different from any convention since Huntley and Brinkley rode out of the West in 1956, gavel-to-gavel and sweeping all before them. National political conventions are as much rituals of the press and television as they are of the two parties; so it's no wonder that here, as in Madison Square Garden last month, a corps of academics is on hand solely to "study the media" and their part in "the communications process."

To one grizzled practitioner who remembers having to bear up bravely under the burden of being just one of "the boys in the newspaper game," the contemporary eminence of the press and TV—not to mention their sprawling presence here—is vaguely discomfiting. Whatever the communications process is in Kansas City at the moment it seems to be in a state of overkill.

The television networks, for example, do a splendid job of covering what happens at and around the convention, as well as conveying a sense of immediacy and involvement. But they also cover a lot that isn't happening, or wouldn't if the cameras weren't there, and fill a lot of otherwise peaceful air with interviews and comment that add little to anyone's useful knowledge.

Television coverage often seems ritualistic, too, as if it were its own excuse for being, regardless of the news values involved. President Ford's arrival at his hotel here, an event of profound insignificance, was treated as not much less than a moon landing. And it's hard not to suspect that sometimes one network's lavish expenditures and installations are mostly to match another network's—and that perhaps essential coverage of the convention doesn't demand anything like such displays.

As for the writing press, here as in any unfolding situation an enormous amount of thrashing about is devoted to efforts to learn today what everyone will know anyway on Wednesday and Thursday. News conferences all too often seem like shouting matches at which reporters compete to ask the same questions, and the amount of copy being filed here is to hard news as the Missouri River is to the flow of soft drinks in the Muehlebach bar.

Nevertheless, the press and television are in a real sense the nerve ends and ganglia of this convention, as of any other. John Sears' war of nerves and maneuver on the Ford and uncommitted delegates is being waged essentially in the media, which create the atmosphere of events as well as color their perception. Credible but not necessarily accurate reports showing, say, Ronald Reagan winning over Pennsylvania, or Gerald Ford gaining among the uncommitteds, might well generate decisive reaction on the floor.

In the larger "communications process" of carrying the news to the country, television will convey what happens as soon as it happens, of course, and the writing reporters will do their best to explain it. But the real importance of press and television here may be more in what happens, and in how they influenced its happening.

I began tempting close associates to request favors of me so that I could taste the pleasure of telling them about my devotion to the bottom line. One day I asked a woman to whom I am very close whether she didn't need a new garden hose, and was disappointed when she said no, for I had been primed to tell her that after looking at the bottom line such purchases were out of the question.

I had even anticipated her pleas for indulgence, which I intended to crush in my cool executive voice with "I intend to be absolutely hard-nosed about hoses" and "as a pragmatic man, I simply cannot justify it."

I was, you see, no longer content with being merely a bottom line guy. I also wanted to be called "pragmatic" and "hard-nosed," as winning politicians are always called by political reporters. If the affliction had continued, I suppose I would have ended up thirsting to be known as "the Genghis Khan of the kids' small loan business and garden hose investment world."

Recently a philosopher asked to borrow the car for the evening. A delightful opening. Naturally, I refused, citing my dedication to the bottom line.

"What's the bottom line?" he inquired.

He had me, but I wrestled. I pointed out that there was the top line, and the middle line, and probably some quarter lines, all of which were followed by the bottom line.

In that case, he said, he much preferred to be a top line guy, and so should I, and why didn't I lend him $5 as well as the car?

I explained that it was because I was both hard-nosed and pragmatic. He smiled in superior fashion and departed, which left me unaccountably depressed. I pored through several histories of baseball to investigate my theory that "the botttom line" was a phrase referring to baseball score cards, but the evidence was inconclusive.

The evening was becoming bleak. Grandmother no longer invited me to watch television with her in the evenings, knowing that my answer would be "as a bottom line guy, I can't waste my time that way."

I telephoned the house of an acquaintance I hadn't heard from for months to ask if he had patched things up with his wife. I remembered him as a real bottom line guy from way back. His wife answered the telephone. She was cheery.

"Where's Henry?" I asked.

"Where he always talked about going," she said. "The bottom line."

I didn't understand. "He died last month," she said.

I make small loans again and lend the car readily. "Soft-nosed," they call me. I'd say, "a middle line guy."

New York's Western Partner

Santa Fe trains don't run along Park Avenue, but we work with railroads in the East to provide direct service to and from western points.

Keeping up-to-date is one way we get the job done. For example, Santa Fe recently completed a $50 million automated classification yard at Barstow, California, to more efficiently handle freight between the East and the busy West Coast cities.

For faster service for trailers and containers, Santa Fe has one of the most modern Piggy-back facilities at Chicago.

All of this plus a fleet of fast daily freights connecting with railroads serving the East. For help with your shipping needs, call Santa Fe in New York, Boston, Buffalo and Philadelphia. We have traffic representatives in major eastern cities ready to help you.

as Jordan, head of Skycomp Data Corporation, rating traffic for the Tri-State Regional Planning Commission from an airplane over the junction of the Garden State Parkway and the New Jersey Turnpike Sunday.

Sunday Traffic Found Lightening

By RALPH BLUMENTHAL
Special to The New York Times

PRINCETON, N.J., Aug. 15—"There's some good 'six' traffic," said Tom Koebele, maneuvering the little red and white Cessna Skyhawk a thousand feet over a thickening stream of traffic on the Garden State Parkway.

"That's a 'five-level,' Tom, that's not solid enough for 'six,'" said his companion, Thomas Jordan, behind him in the four-seater, single-engine plane, a map covered with inked-in figures spread open on his lap.

Almost every summer Sunday for the last four years, Mr. Jordan and aides have been flying over the metropolitan area's main highways, mapping and rating the traffic flow on a scale of one (minimal traffic) to six (stop and go).

The survey, a project of the Tri-State Regional Planning Commission, has produced a striking observation: homebound weekend traffic congestion has dropped sharply since 1973.

The data, compiled by the federally subsidized New York-New Jersey-Connecticut planning agency, showed, among other things:

¶Between 1973 and 1975, congestion on limited-access highways throughout the region on Sunday afternoons and nights has decreased 61 percent, with congestion totals on roadways dropping from 640 to 251 miles.

¶Conversely, miles of moderate and light traffic increased—65 percent and 15 percent, respectively.

¶The congestion that remains has been shifting to the later hours: in 1973 the peak occurred between 6:40 P.M. and 9:20; last summer, the biggest jams built up between 9:20 P.M. and midnight.

¶Despite the improvements, major trouble spots remain—the Tappan Zee Bridge on the Gov. Thomas E. Dewey Thruway, the Garden State Parkway north of the New Jersey Turnpike, the Long Island Expressway and other corridors to the beach resorts, and the George Washington Bridge and Cross Bronx Expressway.

Although the so-called "eyeballing" of this summer's traffic is still in progress, Lyman Coddington, information manager of the Tri-State Regional Planning Commission, said there was no reason to believe the trend had reversed itself this year. However, he added that a "leveling-off" of gains was expected.

"I don't think we'll ever have zero congestion," he said.

The commission, which expanded its scope from a transportation agency to a planning body in 1971, attributes the declining congestion not to reduced traffic—vehicle travel miles have been increasing—but to other factors: new highway construction, other road improvements and shifting travel patterns.

Conditions Assessed

Mr. Coddington acknowledged that there could have been some "faulty eyeballing," but he called the basic methodology of the survey sound, saying: "We don't count construction or accidents."

In what might have been a typical Sunday flyover today, Mr. Jordan, a 44-year-old transportation engineer, pilot and Air Force Reserve officer who founded his own aerial research company, the Skycomp Data Corporation of Princeton, met with Mr. Koebele at the small general aviation Princeton Airport at 5 P.M.

With Mr. Koedele, a 26-year-old commercial airline pilot, at the controls of a high-wing Cessna rented for about $25 an hour, they circled back and forth at up to 120 miles an hour 1,000 feet over the turnpike and parkways, assessing condition.

ment there, and at the nearby Del Mar Shores Terrace, are threatened by erosion that has cut away three to five feet of the site in the last 18 months, Mr. Kuhn said.

"The only thing that is going to save them is construction of a concrete seawall at the base of the crumbling cliffs," he added.

Some residents of the two developments have talked of filing a lawsuit against San Diego County for allowing the developers to build so close to the cliff edge.

The developers had sought permission to place a rock fill along the base of the bluff to slow down the erosion, but the California Coastline Commission refused, arguing that the rocks would be deposited on a public beach and would aggravate erosion on both sides of the rock fill, affecting other homeowners.

The state commission would agree only to the construction of a concrete seawall.

Also in Danger

Another community of disappearing coastline is Encinitas, a flower-growing center of 6,000 residents 13 miles north of here. Scripps scientists say that the coast at Encinitas receded inland more than 830 feet in the last 93 years, yielding about 20 acres of prime oceanfront real estate to the Pacific.

Fifth and Sixth Streets, near Moonlight Beach, once choice residential areas, have vanished into the ocean, as have 210 feet at the foot of E Street and an entire block on B Street between Fifth and Sixth.

D. T. Atherton recalled how a number of Encinitas homes near Moonlight Beach were carried away in 1945 when a 30-foot-deep chunk of land splashed into the ocean.

Dr. Wolfgang Berger, a Scripps geologist working with Mr. Kuhn on the erosion study, said that there was no way to gauge the annual rate of land loss along the coast.

"It all depends on the particular location, the subsoil content and the weather," he said, adding that in some locations farther up the coast the rate of erosion is slower because layers of hard sandstone underlie the cliffs and put up stronger resistance to the waves.

Dr. Francis P. Shepard, also of Scripps, who has been studying coastal erosion for 30 years, said that the bluffs near Scripps Institution had been eroding by an average of one foot a year until 1947, when the erosion stopped. But recently the crumbling of the bluff foundations began again.

A huge block of a bluff just north of the oceanography center's new biology building fell into the ocean last winter.

Mr. Kuhn, in discussing the danger that exists along the coast where developments are rising on sheer bluffs, said that too little attention has been paid in the past to weather conditions in studying coastal erosion.

"The wearing away and collapse of the coastal bluffs is greatly accelerated during extended wet periods, and when severe storms at sea produce high, forceful surf," he said.

"These conditions have not occurred with any regularity since the 1940's. We have had a long, dry period, with only four or five inches of rainfall many years, whereas 90 years ago in a two-month period Escondido had 50.15 inches of rain and Encinitas had 27 inches."

The New York Times/David Strick

Erosion of the Southern California coast by the ocean threatens condominiums like these at Solano Beach, near La Jolla. A 30-mile stretch, from La Jolla north to Oceanside, is vanishing at rate of two to three feet a year.

The Major Events of the Day

Republican Convention

President Ford got enough delegate commitments at the start yesterday of the 31st Republican National Convention in Kansas City, Mo., to assure him the majority of the votes he needs for the Presidential nomination. He has 1,130 votes, according to The New York Times tabulation, but his nomination was threatened by the prospect of divisive floor maneuvers by Ronald Reagan forces. Senator Howard H. Baker Jr. of Tennessee delivered the convention's keynote speech with a rousing attack on Jimmy Carter, in which he was joined by Vice President Rockefeller, Senator Robert Dole of Kansas, who is the convention's temporary chairman, and Senator Barry Goldwater of Arizona. [Page 1, Column 8.]

Setting up a probable floor fight at the convention tonight, campaign strategists for Ronald Reagan proposed to add a platform plank that would implicitly criticize the foreign policies of President Ford and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger. Another platform fight seemed assured when 29 delegates, led by women members of the Platform Committee, sought to remove the plank endorsing a constitutional amendment "to restore protection of the right to life for unborn children." [1:6-7.]

The Mississippi delegation to the convention, with its 30 delegates "uncommitted" under a unit rule, has a crucial position and is under 24-hour siege by the candidates, the press and the curious who are yearning to know how the delegation will vote. Other pivotal delegations, among them groups from West Virginia and Pennsylvania, are under the same pressure. [1:6-7.]

Senator James L. Buckley of New York withdrew from the Presidential race. He made the announcement at a news conference at the convention, where New York delegates were openly critical of his candidacy or gave him a cold shoulder. He acknowledged a general lack of support and said that "I will not be a candidate for anything but re-election to the Senate." [1:5.]

International

Kakuei Tanaka, former Prime Minister of Japan, was charged in a Tokyo court with having accepted, while in office, $1.6 million from the Lockheed Aircraft Corporation to arrange the purchase of Lockheed planes by All Nippon Airways. Three Japanese business executives were also indicted on bribery charges with Mr. Tanaka, who remained in jail pending a bail application. [1:1.]

Earthquakes struck China and an area off the Philippines last night and early today, according to seismological reports. The quakes were believed severe enough to cause extensive damage and casualties. The quake in China was centered in Szechwan Province, about 800 miles southwest of the area devastated by an earthquake three weeks ago. The one off the Philippines was in the Gulf of Moro near Mindanao. [1:2-3.]

National

Reacting to a crime wave that has swept Detroit's East Side, the city's officials recalled 450 laid-off police officers and ordered a 10 P.M. curfew for all children 17 years old and under. The action followed the disruption of a rock concert in Cobo Hall, in the downtown area, by a crowd of youths and adults, who robbed dozens of people in the audience. A woman was raped and another molested, the police said. [1:1-3.]

Metropolitan

The Federal Court of Appeals removed a preliminary injunction issued last Friday by a Federal District Court judge in Brooklyn that halted the start of a sale by the Government of leases on oil and natural gas deposits in the Atlantic Ocean, off Long Island. New York State, several Long Island communities and an environmentalist group had sued to prevent the sale. A three-judge panel on the Appeals Court ruled unanimously that "no irreparable harm" would result from allowing the sale to be held pending a court hearing on the environmental issues next month. [1:2-3.]

A long-term financial plan that would substantially increase the state's share of the City University's senior-college operating budgets by 1979-80 has been proposed by the New York State Board of Regents. The state's share would rise to 80 percent, while the city's share would be reduced to 20 percent. The Regents also reaffirmed their opposition to a merger of the State and City University systems. CORRECTION

An article in The Times on Aug. 12 incorrectly reported the projected cost of a hospital to be built in My Lai, Vietnam, by Friendshipment, a group of church and civic organizations. The correct figure is $140,000. As a result of a typographical error the same article said $175 million had been raised to aid in the reconstruction of Vietnam. It should have said $1.75 million.

Queens Woman, 29, Is Held on 2d Case Of Welfare Fraud

A 29-year-old Queens woman, the mother of four children who has worked as a clerk-typist and collected welfare since 1970, was arrested yesterday on a welfare-fraud charge similar to one to which she pleaded guilty two years ago.

The state's Welfare Inspector General, Richard V. Horan, and a spokesman for Nicholas Ferraro, the Queens District Attorney, said that it was extremely rare for a welfare recipient to be prosecuted twice for the same kind of alleged fraud.

The woman, Helen Ervin of 115-49 147th Street, Jamaica, was accused of concealing income and of fraudulently accepting $6,639 in assistance over an 18-month period. A State Supreme Court justice put the case off for a week to enable her to obtain legal counsel, and she was released without bail.

Mr. Horan said that the woman had pleaded guilty to a similar second-degree grand larceny charge in October 1974. In that case, she was said to have accepted $5,790 in illegal assistance over a four-year period by failing to report $103-a-week earnings from Eye Gate House, a manufacturer of educational aids at 146-01 Archer Avenue, Jamaica.

It is not illegal to be employed while collecting welfare, but full earnings must be reported to authorities for the proper amounts of assistance to be set, depending on family size and other circumstances.

Mr. Horan said that Mrs. Ervin had been ordered to make full restitution in the first case, but had paid back only $300. He said, moreover, that she had continued to collect $528 a month in assistance, even though she was entitled to collect only $160 a month because of her earned income.

The result, Mr. Horan said, was a resumption of the fraud that had led to the original charge against her.

The youths apparently meant to attack the Warrens' son, Lindsay, 18; his daughter, India, 15, and two teenage friends who were on the sidewalk, the police said. When the four of them fled into the Warrens' home, the youths followed, according to the police, chopped through the front door and broke in through the attached garage.

The youths allegedly slashed paintings and drawings in the garage and the front hall of the house. Mr. Warren is a partner in a Manhattan art store and frame shop. Mrs. Warren and two younger children were at home at the time.

Mr. Warren and his relatives have been trying to help the police by "cooling down" any talk of reprisal by black youths in the neighborhood. "This is a good neighborhood," Mr. Warren said. He added:

"It's one of the few integrated neighborhoods, where property values just keep shooting up year after year. The trouble is, there's no place for the kids to go here, nothing for them to do. So they hang around and get beer and get into trouble."

"But it is still one of the best neighborhoods you will find for blacks and whites," he declared.

Mrs. Warren said:

"You can see what they did to this house—the violence—if these children had not sought the protection of my home . . . I hope that an incident like this never, ever occurs again, regardless to whom."

RIGHT TO CANCEL INSURANCE EASIER

Property Policies Can Be Dropped More Quickly Under Change in Law

By JOSEPH P. FRIED

Under a little-publicized change in New York State law, insurance companies will be able to cancel many fire-insurance and other property-damage policies on apartment buildings with greater ease than they could before.

According to the State Insurance Department, the change in law applies to policies held by landlords and cooperative corporations, effective on or after Aug. 1, 1976, in buildings in the state with more than four apartments. Insurance companies issuing such policies will be able to cancel them, for any reason whatever, with just 30 days' notice.

Previously, insurance policies on apartment buildings, like those on small residential buildings, could be freely canceled only within the first 60 days after the policies were issued.

After 60 days, any cancellations could take place under the law only if certain specific grounds arose. If such grounds did not arise, the policy had to remain in force for three years.

Becoming Aware

Real estate people, many of whom are only now becoming aware of the change, say it will make it even harder for many apartment owners and cooperative corporations to retain sufficient fire, property-damage and liability insurance for their buildings.

The change in law is the "latest ripoff" inflicted on apartment owners, according to Seymour Zuckerman, president of the Community Housing Improvement Program, a major New York City landlord group. The change was passed during the last session of the Legislature and approved in June by Governor Carey.

Like several other spokesmen for owners, Mr. Zuckerman insisted that, even where insurance companies were limited by law to specific grounds in canceling apartment-building policies after 60 days, they many times sought to cancel without the existence of these grounds.

Premium Nonpayment

Grounds for cancellation after 60 days included such situations as nonpayment of policy premiums, changes in the building or reckless acts that heightened risk, and changes in the insurance company's fortunes that would justify cancellation.

If the insurance carriers do not have to cite such specific grounds to begin with, Mr. Zuckerman held, they will cancel policies even more readily.

Milton Freedman, assistant general counsel of the State Insurance Department, disagreed that the change in law would make it harder for buildings to obtain coverage.

More Willing

If insurance companies know that they may cancel policies more easily, rather than "being locked in for three years," they will be more willing to write the policies to begin with, he said.

He said that apartment-house policies that were effective before this month remained subject to the old cancellation restrictions governing after 60 days, although some insurance people insisted that such policies, too, were now free of the restrictions.

The change in law regarding new policies, he held, is "logical" because it subjects apartment buildings," "which are a business," to the same insurance-protection rules as commercial properties.

The coffins of Joseph and Angelina Tucci being carried from Regina Pacis Roman Catholic Shrine after funeral yesterday in the Bay Ridge-Borough Park section of Brooklyn.

200 Friends and Neighbors at Services For Elderly Couple Slain in Brooklyn

By PRANAY GUPTE

Joseph and Angelina Tucci were buried yesterday, a few miles from the small house in Brooklyn to which they had come from Italy 50 years ago in search of a new life, and in which they were beaten to death with a hammer last week.

They were remembered yesterday by scores of relatives and neighbors as kind and generous people, a childless couple who took care of their friends' children and tended their neighbors' gardens.

"They will never be forgotten for these things," said the Rev. Mario Piombini, who celebrated a mass of the resurrection at the Regina Pacis Roman Catholic Shrine on 65th Street, between 12th and 13th Avenues in the Bay Ridge-Borough Park section. "Joseph and Angelina were what every neighbor should be."

Violence Deplored

As he spoke, several of the 200 mourners present sobbed, and their sobs echoed in the huge church. The men and women in the pews reflected the range of the Tuccis' friends—there were elderly people like the Tuccis themselves (Mr. Tucci was 74 years old and his wife, 82) as well as teen-agers.

Father Piombini spoke about the double murder and about what he characterized as the "desperate violence of our times." The bodies of the Tuccis had been found in their home at 1048 63d Street in Bay Ridge-Borough Park last Thursday evening. Both had been bound and gagged, and then beaten to death.

Father Piombini spoke, too, against harboring hatred toward those who had committed violent crimes. He appeared to be alluding to what has been a mood of anger in the neighborhood since the murder of the Tuccis. Now that anger seems to be directed toward two teen-aged suspects who have been apprehended by the police.

The police indicated yesterday that they knew the identity of a third suspect and that an all-points bulletin had been issued. They also credited neighbors with supplying the information that had led to the two arrests.

After the church services, the funeral procession, which included Mr. Tucci's brother, Louis, and sister, Fay Folese, and their children, moved slowly to the Greenwood Cemetery. There the eulogy was delivered by the Rev. Nick Sage, a family friend from Long Island.

"Joseph and Angelina belong to the ages now," Father Sage said. "Their good deeds will sustain us. We will miss them."

Then, in a family plot under the biggest maple tree in the cemetery, amid the chrysanthemums and gladiolas that Mr. Tucci had grown for a livelihood, he and Mrs. Tucci were buried.

A hearing on the motion will be held on Sept. 20 before Justice Leonard H. Sandler, assigned to all cases brought by the special state prosecutor.

The indictment charged the three with attempting to coerce Charles Hagedorn, publisher of City News, a weekly newspaper distributed in the Bronx, to discontinue articles that were allegedly critical of the activities of the defendants.

The three politicians were accused of threatening to use their political influence to get the Bronx County surrogate, as well as other governmental agencies, to stop giving City News legal advertising.

Contending that Mr. Hagedorn was their political enemy, Mr. Kaufman said: "In the hurly-burly political confrontation and infighting, the saying of harsh and tough things by an adversary cannot and should not in any way be made the subject of a criminal prosecution."

In papers filed by Mr. Kaufman's lawyer, Stanley S. Arkin, the court was told it "might find it helpful to have some insight" into Mr. Hagedorn. It said that the publisher had been censured in 1958 by Congress for composing and distributing fraudulent campaign literature on behalf of former Representative Frederic Coudert Jr., and that, in addition, he had been convicted in 1968 of income tax evasion.

The paper said that "the ability of an elected official to sue for defamation is almost nonexistent." Mr. Kaufman's response to the criticisms of Mr. Hagedorn was "get off my back or I'll tell my friends not to do business with you."

The papers said Mr. Kaufman's reaction was "a fair and understandable one for an individual provoked as he was by Hagedorn."

The charges against Mr. Kaufman, the papers said, "represent a truly outrageous overreaching an abuse of prosecutorial power by the former special state prosecutor Maurice H. Nadjari."

Mobil Refund on Taxi 'Gas' Ordered

The Federal Energy Administration has ordered the Mobil Oil Corporation to refund $600,000 to three gasoline distributors who supply taxicab fleets in New York City. Mobil was found to have violated Federal mandatory price ceilings on gasoline products and to have overcharged the three distributors in sales made during 1972. The refunds went to Taxicab Owners Cooperative Inc., representing 15 fleets and about 2,000 taxis to the RAD Oil Company and Viking Facilities Inc. The distributors had passed along the overcharge to the fleet owners. Now the refunds will also be passed along to the fleets.

Kallinger Asks New Robbery Trial

Joseph Kallinger's lawyers in Philadelphia sought to obtain a new trial for the Philadelphia shoemaker in a Harrisburg robbery case. Arthur L. Gutkin, one of the lawyers, said in a brief that a hearing in Philadelphia last week in connection with New Jersey murder charges against his client had produced significant evidence not available for the robbery trial last year.

Mr. Kallinger is charged with murdering Maria Fasching, a practical nurse, in Leonia, N. J., on Jan. 8, 1975. He is to be tried in Hackensack, N.J., on Sept. 13. Last year the 39-year-old cobbler was convicted of binding and robbing four women in a suburb of Harrisburg, Pa., on Dec. 3, 1974. He was sentenced to 30 to 80 years in prison, then extradited to New Jersey, where he is being held in the Bergen County Jail to await his next trial.

Mr. Gershon, a New York City elementary-school teacher, led the runners through cities and towns ranging from Boston to Slapout, Okla. (population: nine).

"That's where we had one of the nicest turnouts," said Sam W. Mills, 24, from Norwalk, Conn. "Not only did the entire town come out to see us, but there were about 250 people from other towns who made us a big reception."

The runners did on the average 10 miles a day and slept for five hours in one of two mobile homes that was driven by a teammate.

"We also meditated twice a day, once at noon and at 6 P.M.," Mr. Mills said. "This kept everyone in harmony."

As for the future of the Liberty Torch, they plan to continue running and meditating together and entering marathon tournaments.

"We even feel we can run around the world for peace," Mr. Mills said as a band played "America the Beautiful" in the background.

Normally Proper G.O.P. Women Come Out Fighting Over E.R.

The New York Times/George Tames

Phyllis Schlafly, one of the leaders of the opposition to the equal rights amendment, at G.O.P. platform hearing last week.

The E.R.A.'s proponents were also busy at the convention in Kansas City, holding a news conference to their case. From left, Patricia Bailey, Patricia Goldman, Representative Millicent Fenwick and Betsy Gr

Special to The New York Times

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Aug. 16 — Republican politicians who happen to be women observe a special political etiquette of their own. They never wag their fingers at Republican politicians who happen to be men, nor do they issue manifestos listing "demands."

Confrontation, they say, is the Democratic way. Their way is to smile sweetly, speak softly and work hard behind the scenes; to wear the appropriate dress at the appropriate time and never embarrass a man in public.

The etiquette has been observed here, but Republican women have been fighting in the open—among themselves. Next to the fight between President Ford and Ronald Reagan—with which it keeps getting confused and entangled—the women's fight has been the best and most skillfully waged political contest on view here.

In contention is the proposed equal rights amendment, which would bar discrimination on account of sex, and which nine consecutive Republican conventions, going back to 1940, have endorsed. The E.R.A. has also been endorsed by President Ford and his wife, Betty, but it is opposed by Mr. Reagan and his wife, Nancy. That is one obvious reason that the amendment has been in contention here, but not the most important.

The basic reason is Phyllis Schlafly, who mildly introduces herself as a lawyer's wife from Alton, Ill., and the mother of six, a correct but incomplete description. She is also a sharp and prolific polemicist for conservative causes and a skillful organizer—the author of a monthly newsletter called The Phyllis Schlafly Report, with a circulation, she says, of 14,000 and the prime mover behind the "Stop E.R.A." campaign that has come close in the last two years to doing just that.

Her picture adorns the masthead of the newsletter and it can best be described as glamorous. Mrs. Schlafly is 52 years old, but it is not false advertising. A blonde with deep blue eyes, a figure that can still be called willowy and a winning smile, she does not have to shout to get attention.

She made the first of two unsuccessful races for Congress in 1952 and has been active in Republican politics ever since, but never had the influence in her party that she demonstrated here last week when she and other aroused Republican women who are her followers nearly succeeded in blocking the 10th endorsement of the equal rights amendment in a Republican platform.

"Stop E.R.A." was not yet a cause when the Republicans met in 1972 to renominate Richard M. Nixon. In women's politics at that convention, it was the feminists who had the greatest impact, succeeding in inserting in the platform the one plank that had not been crafted in advance in the Nixon White House—an endorsement of federally financed day care.

The Republican Women's Task Force, which is affiliated with the National Women's Political Caucus, is also new on the scene. This year it had hoped to move on to new goals; to increase, for instance, the representation of women at the convention. Instead it has had to fight and lobby and organize merely to hold its own.

Mrs. Schlafly portrays E.R.A. as "an attack on the wife and homemaker." The feminists in the task force bridle at the suggestion that they are less representative of Republican women—wives and homemakers included—than their opponents. Surveys, they maintain, prove the opposite.

"I know perfectly well that Phyllis Schlafly has domestic help to scrub her kitchen floors. I scrub my own kitchen floors,' said Betsy Griffith, a national officer of the women's caucus who has been representing the task force before the Republican rules committee here. "Some day we can compare dishpan hands."

Privately, the Republican feminists acknowledge that they have found it advisable to dress up for the convention, wearing high heels and dresses, not pants. Miss Griffith, who is married to John Deardourff, a political consultant who specializes in moderate Republicans, made it a point to bring her wedding ring, which she doesnt usually wear.

Historian by Training

But she has not had to reach for her needlepoint to demonstrate to her fellow Republicans that feminism is not at war with domesticity, for she is conspicuously pregnant. "Do you hate men?" a middle-aged Republican male asked after one of her appearances for the task force.

"Can't you tell I'm pregnant," she replied. "I have a lovely husband who supports the equal rights amendment."

Tall, blonde and—to repeat an adjective because once again it applies — glamorous, Miss Griffith was a Republican before she became a feminist. Now 29, she was president of the Young Republicans at Wellesley College in her junior year ("something I only mention at Republican conventions.") A historian by training, she can make the case that the Republican party has traditionally been more open to the cause of women than the Democrats.

If it hadn't been for the Ford-Reagan contest, Miss Griffith says, the task force women would have challenged the credentials of state delegations that have conspicuously failed to live up to a party rule that they strive for equal representation of men and women at the convention.

Never a Chance

But, in fact, it was the Ford delegations that had been the worst offenders; faced with the Reagan challengers, the Ford strategists had weighted their delegate slates with the names of well-known politicians who were, not surprisingly, mostly men.

The task force had not endorsed any candidate. It claimed some Reagan women —a handful, at least—among its supporters. But it was not about to blindly pursue a tactic that would abet the nomination of the candidate who opposed E.R.A.

Mrs. Schlafly was at no such disadvantage tactically, being a strong Reagan supporter who says she could not support Mr. Ford so long as he retains Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger (whom she has attacked in two book-length tracts, "Kissinger on the Couch" and, hot off the presses, "Ambush at Vladivostok").

When she appeared before the platform committee last week, she was able to point to her constituency and the striking success "Stop E. R. A." has had in blocking the ratification of the amendment in state legislatures. The measure has stalled after having been passed in 34 of the 38 states needed for ratification.

Coats: The Romance Goes On

The New York Times/Tyrone Dukes

Coat as wide as a cape, worn over Chester Weinberg's jersey tunic and pants, above, for Garay. Striped woolen blanket, right, with turtleneck jersey dress, by Bill Haire, for Friedericks Sport.

By BERNADINE MORRIS

The design of a winter coat was once strictly prescribed. The garment was cut straight in a boxy shape or it had a small indentation at the waistline and a bit of flare through the skirt. About the only acceptable alternative was the coat with a ripple at the back.

Collars were notched, shawl, or occasionally buttoned high at the neckline. Belt and buttons provided the décor.

The pattern has of course exploded in recent years, when the outer urban garment in the dead of winter might be a quilted nylon parka, suitable for the Arctic, a heavy knitted sweater borrowed from the upper reaches of the Andes or a cloak, voluminous and mysterious, appropriate for a rendezvous in a 19th-century chalet.

The romance continues this fall.

In the vast assortment of styles geared to keep the frost from the body, two types stand out. One is the coat as wide as a cape, with some of its flourish. Its advantage over the cape is that it does stay anchored on the body, leaving the arms free for fumbling with keys and bus tokens and for carrying home groceries. It can be a float of mohair, a rain-proof plastic or a tailored affair as meticulously constructed as the coat of yore.

The other ubiquitous style is a blanket. Right, a blanket. It can be striped like a blanket, fringed like a blanket. It can be knitted, or lined wih poplin, or made of a sturdy, conventional woolen fabric. When it's not covering the shoulders, it can be used as a lap robe. Or folded up and sat upon in a football stadium.

What the two styles have in common is plenty of width, so it doesn't matter how many sweaters or jackets are worn underneath. What they also have is plenty of flourish. It takes a bit of skill to handle a blanket, but once acquired it's a useful technique. It can give grandeur to a rectangle of fabric.

Bracelets, for a Dainty Ankle or Weighty Boot

By RUTH ROBINSON

Just the other day it seems multiple pierced earrings and nose studs were the latest thing in personal adornment. Now it's the anklet's turn to make the fashion scene.

"It was the logical place to go," said Lee Caldwell, who with Phyllis Kaplan has put together a collection of the ornaments. They're a natural for resort wear, but the partners see them in town too, right now with parachute pants in the fall over boots.

Women will no doubt be lavishing as much care on selecting the right anklet for each outfit as they did on those ethnic bead necklaces. Born Yesterday, as the women have named their enterprise, offers variety enough—from 1950's indentification anklets to unisex sterling chains, from silk cords to strings of the bright plastic fruit once popular as millinery trim.

The anklets range in price from $4 to $20 at Reminiscence, 175 MacDougal Street; Medusa, 1207 First Avenue near 65th Street, and Shady Lady, 2205 Broadway near 78th Street. One-of-a-kind pieces incorporating such things as Victorian watch fobs or Tiffany glass may run into more money, however.

Since, as Alice Schweitzer puts it, "we can't all be size 6 and 22 years old," she has seem to it that the boutique bearing her name at 739 Madison Avenue, between 64th and 65th Streets, stocks clothes to please almost everyone. And indeed the selection of slacks, tops, skirts, raincoats, evening dresses, at-home things, hats and accessories is surprisingly wide for such a small place.

For the women who is "heavy but not flabby" there is an elegant off-one-shoulder dress in sizes to 14 and 16, for the traveler, knits weighing next to nothing, and for the younger set chiffons by Chacoq of the Riviera with thin shoulder straps and tiered skirts falling to the floor like so many flower petals in pastel pinks, yellows and blues shading to lavender.

Mrs. Schweitzer prides herself on keeping up with fashion trends. After all, she says, she was the first in the United States to sell Missoni knitwear. Three years ago, in the vanguard again, she fell in love with and bought crepe de chine shirts by the young designer, Chantal Scali. The latest Scali collection here ranges from romantic dresses, such as a finely pleated georgette in subtle beige and violet print ($550), to the shirts ($105), which come in 24 colors and five styles. Teamed with matching silk or wool skirts they are right for almost any occasion.

Stilwell Ending Korea Command

Gen. Richard G. Stilwell said in Seoul yesterday that he would give up his United Nations Command in Korea the first week in October, and retire soon afterward. The command, formed in 1950 in the Korean War, now includes 40,000 Americans and 600,000 South Koreans.

Born in Buffalo, N.Y., General Stilwell attended Brown University before he was graduated from West Point, where he was later commander of cadets. In his 38 years in the Army, he held combat commands in the Korean and Vietnam Wars and also served at the Pentagon.

THREE ARRESTED IN BRIBERY CASE

Alleged Bookmakers Also Face Gambling Charges

Three alleged bookmakers on the East Side who, according to the authorities, refused to believe that police officers could be honest, were arrested yesterday and charged with bribery, conspiracy and gambling.

District Attorney Robert M. Morgenthau and Deputy Police Commissioner John Taylor said the three men had paid $18,350 in protection money to Detective Owen Kelly and Patrolmen Thomas Fitzgerald and John Holder. In addition, the policemen, who were pretending to cooperate, received two raincoats and six bottles of Scotch whisky as Christmas presents.

The operation began in May 1975 when the policemen raided Lanza's Restaurant, 168 First Avenue near 10th Street. Mike Lanza, the owner, and Herman Wexler, according to the police, offered them $3,000 to return the records they used in their bookmaking.

Monthly Payments

Mr. Morgenthau said the policemen had accepted and were "put on the pad" for monthly payments to protect Mr. Lanza and Mr. Wexler and another alleged bookmaker, Joseph Yedvobnik, and to inform them and their friends about lawmaking efforts.

At one point, the policemen warned the suspects that another officer was taking bribes from one Louis Richko but was reporting back to headquarters. Soon afterward, Mr. Richko was arrested and convicted of bribery, but the incident was said to have strengthened the suspects' confidence in their informants.

The three alleged bookmakers were arrested at dawn. They pleaded not guilty and were released on their own recognizance. They face penalties up to seven years. Also arrested were two alleged helpers, Martin Stone and Samuel Fox, who were charged with possession of gambling records.

Kissinger Orders a Study Of Charges of Favoritism

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16 (AP) —Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger has ordered an investigation into charges of official favoritism in the awarding of construction and real estate contracts for American diplomatic facilities abroad.

A State Department announcement today said that Robert M. Sayre, inspector general of the Foreign Service, would conduct the investigation and that the findings would be made public.

The investigation would include—but would not be limited to—allegations raised in a Washington Post article last Saturday, the department said.

According to the newspaper, a Mexican builder, Marcos Russek, received more than $5 million in State Department contracts as a result of "a pattern of official favoritism." The Post said that Mr. Russek regards himself as a good friend of Representative Wayne L. Hays, Republican of Ohio, and has entertained Mr. Hays in Mexico on four or five occasions.

5 Men Begin Jail Sentences in 1971 Beating of Yonkers Immigrant

By JOYCE MAYNARD

Five and a half years ago, Chester Ozerowski, who was 14 years old, struck a 19-year-old Jordanian immigrant over the head with a baseball bat at a Yonkers restaurant, fracturing the busboy's skull and leaving him partially paralyzed. The assailant served five months in a juvenile reformatory and was released.

Yesterday, five young men in their early 20's, none of whom had struck a blow in the 1971 incident, began serving jail sentences of up to four years for conspiracy and assault, following the denial of their final motion in a state court for a stay of sentence.

Martin Miller, 22, Tommy Ozerowski, 23, Tommy O'Neill, 23, Roger Santavicca, 22, and Russell DePasquale, 21, were admitted to the Westchester County Jail in Valhalla, N.Y., to await a ruling from the court on the prison where they will serve a minimum of one year.

After years of litigation and what lawyers for the five men have called highly sensational coverage in the Yonkers press, only one final Federal appeal is pending.

Meanwhile, lawyers for the family of the young Jordanian, Salim Rabadi, now 24, of Yonkers, have filed $25 million in lawsuits against the five convicted young men and their families.

Asked about the jailing of the five young men yesterday, Suad Rabadi, sister of Salim, said, "It's no matter if they put them in jail or not. Someday they leave the jail. My brother never gets out. All morning, my mother cries. She remembers her son, like he used to be."

Salim Rabadi was not informed of yesterday's events. "He doesn't understand," his sister said. "He sleeps all the time."

Catches in His Voice

At the Valhalla jail yesterday, in a blue work shirt and khaki pants several inches too long, Martin Miller lit one of the last cigarettes from the carton he began a few days before and said, "I never believed it was going to end up like this." Not puffing too much on his cigarette, Mr. Miller spoke with catches in his voice when he mentioned his family.

He said he had gone to the Milky Way Lounge on Saturday night with Mr. Santavicca and Mr. DePasquale, but "we just sat there."

On Sunday, Mr. Santavicca went to the first football practice for the Eastchester Ramblers, a semiprofessional team for which he was to play defensive halfback.

"I only went to watch," he said, pushing back a cowlick from what looked like a fresh haircut.

'None of Us Knew'

Mr. O'Neill, who has been working in Norfolk, Va., for the last few years, was married last January. He kissed his wife good-bye in the courtroom yesterday.

"None of us knew, that night five years ago, what was going to happen," he said in a leaden voice. He was very pale, and his prison pants hung very loose. "I'm very sorry someone got hurt, but we didn't do it."

The least subdued of the five, Mr. DePasquale said that in spite of repeated defeats he expected to be out of jail soon.

"We got railroaded, plain and simple," he said. "It was the press and the politics of the courts.

"Figure it out," he said. "You don't see the thing happen, you don't even know what happened, you never touched anybody, and you never get in trouble after that, and five and one half years later you're in jail."

Mr. Ozerowski smiled weakly over a macabre joke about not having a belt so that he couldn't hang himself and said things could have been a lot worse, if he had had a child, too, instead of just a wife to worry about.

"I told her she should go live with her mother until I get out," he said, speaking of his last time alone with his wife, Karen. "I just told her I loved her. We didn't talk much."

'Shouldn't Be' in Jail

"I just want to say we shouldn't be in this place," Mr. Ozerowski said over the muffled shouts of a basketball game outside. The ball sailed into view once or twice, through the window, and a barbed-wire fence glinted in the sun.

"If someone wants to know what kind of person I am, they can just go to the Lazy Bull Steak House where I work and ask anybody. My boss started crying when I told him the news. He just said 'Be good' and ran out the door.

"What I'm worried about is when I get out of here. If being in prison is going to make me a better person, I don't know myself."

"Coming over here in the van, there were some other guys with us—one for drugs, I think, one for robbery. They said, 'What are you in for?' I just said 'assault.' There wasn't any point saying I didn't do it. Who'd believe me?"

Publisher's Hearing Reset

CINCINNATI, Aug. 16 (UPI)—Today's scheduled court hearing on obscenity charges against Larry Flynt of Columbus, publisher of Hustler magazine, was reset for Sept. 7. Judge William J. Morrissey of Hamilton County Common Pleas Court accepted the request of Mr. Flynt's lawyers to delay arguments on defense motions.

Company Pleads Not Guilty In Kepone Contamination

RICHMOND, Va. Aug. 16 (UPI)—Life Science Products Company pleaded not guilty today to charges of conspiring to violate Federal pollution laws in connection with the contamination of the James River by the pesticide Kepone.

William P. Moore, a former officer of the now-defunct company, entered the plea in United States District Court.

The district court clerk's office said it was unaware the arraignment took place and had no information about it.

United States District Court Judge Robert R. Merhige has ordered court employees to provide no information whatsoever about any legal actions and information about the Kepone case because he reportedly fears the impact of pre-trial publicity.

Stockton Wins P.G.A. Title by Stroke

January and Floyd Trail With 282's

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.
Special to The New York Times

BETHESDA, Md., Aug. 16—Although the weather cleared today for the final round of the 58th Professional Golfers' Association championship, the tournament picture remained cloudy until Dave Stockton dropped a 12-foot putt on the 18th green to win by a stroke.

Stockton knew the ball was going into the cup the moment he stroked it, and the 34-year-old Californian began waving his arms before the ball plunked into the cup at the 7,054-yard Congressional Country Club course. Stockton also won the 1970 P.G.A.

He was one of six golfers who threatened to win today during a tense final round that had been postponed a day because of severe thunderstorms that forced an end to yesterday's action. Oddly, Stockton had wanted to continue play when the decision was made yesterday to postpone the entire fourth round. He had played three holes before the round was wiped out.

Stockton, who won the 1970 title by surviving a late rush by Arnold Palmer at Dayton, Ohio, finished with a par score of 34, 36-70 today for a 72-hole total of 281, one over par.

Don January, the 46-year-old comeback attraction, and Ray Floyd, who won the Masters earlier this year, were at 282.

Next came Jerry Pate, the rookie winner of the United States Open and the Canadian open; John Schlee, who has never won a major tourney; Jack Nicklaus, four-time winner of the P.G.A., and David Graham, who makes Nicklaus's golf clubs. Each finished at 283.

On a day of trial and failure for most of the contenders, Stockton, Nicklaus, Graham and January each took a shot at the $45,000 top prize. So did Charles Coody, who started the day two strokes up on the field, and Gil Morgan, the optometrist who led after two rounds. Coody and Morgan finished in a five-way tie for eighth at 284.

Floyd was the clubhouse leader until Stockton sank his winning putt and January birdied the final hole to tie the Masters champion.

Stockton said afterward, "When that last putt was four or five feet from the hole, I knew it was going in. It was a hell of a feeling."

But the 6-foot Stockton didn't know exactly where he stood when he teed off on the final hole with a No. 3 wood. He thought he was two strokes in front of the field and didn't learn the real tightness of his struggle until he was about to hit a 2-iron approach shot of 235 yards to the last green.

This shot was short of the

Yanks' 13-Hit Feast Beats Rangers, 5-1

By MURRAY CHASS

Many of the 21,621 fans at Yankee Stadium last night were upset because a wildcat strike shut down all the concession stands. About 200 employees of Canteen Corporation walked out just before the game.

The fans, however, were not deprived altogether. The Yankees filled the void with their play on the field as they whipped the staggering Texas Rangers, 5-1.

Instead of sipping Cokes, the fans drank up Catfish Hunter's nifty pitching. Instead of munching hot dogs, they ate up Mickey Rivers's inside-the-park home run. Instead of guzzling beer, they got drunk on Fred Stanley's first major league homer since 1973—a barely out-of-the-park home run.

And as icing on the cake, the fans licked their lips over the three hits that Thurman Munson, Chris Chambliss and Graig Nettles each amassed among the Yankees' 13 hits off Gaylord Perry.

There was nothing surprising about Rivers's homer because anytime the opposing outfielders make a mistake on one of his hits, Meteoric Mickey will whiz round the bases faster than—beep beep—The Roadrunner.

Hunter's pitching performance—seven hits and a shutout until the ninth—wasn't surprising either, just heartening to the Yankees because Catfish hasn't been his $3.5 million self this season. The victory was his 14th against 12 defeats.

Stanley's homer, on the other hand, was downright flabbergasting. Chicken, as his teammates affectionately call him, has been on a hot streak, but no one had any right to expect a home run to emerge from it.

"I was the most surprised person in the park," said the shortstop, who has become the team's everyday player at that position instead of being platooned with Jim Mason.

The Yankees had a 3-0 lead when the right-handed-hitting Stanley stepped to the plate against the right-handed-pitching Perry in the fifth inning. Stanley swung at the first pitch and hit it over the left-field fence—except it hooked foul just before reach-

Jim Otis of St. Louis is pulled down by Lou Kelcher of San Diego during the first period of the game in Tokyo

Japanese Fans Go Banzai Over First N.F.L. Contest

TOKYO Aug. 16 (UPI)—Jim Hart lofted a 60-yard touchdown pass to Ike Harris midway through the third quarter and Jim Bakken added a late 20-yard field goal tonight to give the St. Louis Cardinals a 20-10 victory over the San Diego Chargers in the first National Football League game ever played outside North America.

The contest, held before 38,000 "Banzai"-roaring fans at Korakuen Stadium, was a lackluster affair, yet it delighted the Japanese, who until today had only been able to watch pro football on television.

The Mainichi Star Bowl, as the game was called here, was sponsored jointly by the Mainichi Newspaper Company and the Sports Nippon Newspaper Company.

Japanese spectators roared "Chargers, Chargers, Banzai, Banzai!" and "Cardinals, attack the ball!" as a light drizzle fell over the 40,000-seat stadium. United States Army and Navy bands played while eight Cardinal cheerleaders kicked and shook pompoms.

Baseball-crazy Japanese youth have only recently awakened to American football.

"I play American football at my high school. I think it is the best form for expressing masculine strength and power," said 15-year-old Hiroyuki Kase, who paid $26 for his seat.

"I've watched American football on television, but it's more exciting live, with the sound of shoulders and helmets crashing," said Mitsuharu Tamura, another 15-year-old.

"I came all the way from Kobe to see this game," said 13-year-old Kazubiko Hamada, resplendent in a pale blue Chargers T-shirt. "I bought my ticket a month ago."

With St. Louis leading, 10-3, in the third quarter, an effective rush by the Chargers hurried the Cardinal kicker, Terry Joyce, into a bad punt from the end zone to his 28.

After a 4-yard pass to Charlie Joiner, the Charger quarterback, Ban Fouts, threw a 25-yard scoring strike to Dwight Mc Donald. Sergio Albert converted to tie the score at 10-10.

But the Cardinals quickly moved into a 17-10 lead as Hart passed 30 yards to Harris, who ran another 30 yards down

The Designated Gimmick

Now why would a strait-laced guy like Bowie Kuhn suddenly decide that they should play the World Series with 10 men on a side this year and nine on a side next year?

He did it to break a tie: For the last four summers, the American League has let "the 10th man" bat for the pitcher but the National League has refused. The issue wasn't tradition; it was money. Eight of the 12 teams in the American League lost money in 1972 and only three drew more than a million customers. So they installed the "designated hitter" as an experiment to energize both the game and the gate, and started plugging to make it universal. But the National League, with newer stadiums and bigger crowds; wouldn't bite. "It will give jobs to a lot of men that are elderly and slow," old Casey Stengel reflected at the time. "They don't hit .400 today, and the pitchers even expectorate on the ball."

Sports of The Times

Depending on how you translate Stengel, he meant that people were always tinkering with the balance between offense and defense. Foul balls were ruled strikes in 1903, the spitball was banned in 1920, the "lively" ball was introduced in 1930, the strike zone was widened in 1962, the strike zone was narrowed in 1969 and the pitcher's mound was lowered the same year. Then came the American League's "10th man," and now the commissioner has voted to play the "dh" in the World Series in alternate years—the way baseball will switch television networks in alternate years.

Only Computers Need Apply

Things are getting so complicated that they may need John Kenneth Galbreath as a consultant before long. We already have "5-and-10" players who can veto trades after five years with one club and 10 years in the big leagues. We're about to get "six-year players" who can become free agents, but only 12 teams can bid for them. We have arbitration after two years and "repeater rights" for five years. And the commissioner, breaking another tie between the leagues, has just voted to permit "performance contracts" based on 12 categories of statistics like victories pitched, earned-run average, games saved, runs batted in, home runs, slugging percentage, total bases, stolen bases and even bases on balls.

Neither Professor Galbreath nor Professor Stengel nor the Cincinnati Reds were around when Alexander Joy Cartwright wrote down the rules of the game 150 years ago: bases 90 feet apart, three outs to a side each inning, nine innings to a game, nine men to a team. They are things that Bowie Kuhn often extols as the "wonderful geometry" of baseball. But within the ancient rules, the Cincinnati Reds play better baseball than anybody else these days—and draw more customers than almost anybody else.

They didn't use or need "the 10th man" last summer but, in one blistering 50-game stretch, they won 41 times, Pete Rose got 70 hits, Joe Morgan reached base 97 times, Johnny Bench hit 12 home runs and knocked in 47 runs, their three best pitcher went 17 and 0, and the defense played 152 innings without making an error. At the end of the season, they counted 2,315,603 paid admissions and everybody collected World Series checks.

"From our point of view, it doesn't matter too much," conceded Sparky Anderson, the manager of the marvels. "We'll be there if they use 9 men or 10 or 12 on a side. But from the fans' point of view, I can see only two places where the designated hitter might create interest—in spring training, where they might see the odd player go to bat more often, and in the All-Star Game, where extra hitters always go to bat for the pitcher anyway. Otherwise, they're taking away the fans' chance to drink beer and second-guess the manager."

Man Wants No Respect

They're still second-guessing the manager in Boston, where Anderson's Reds played the World Series to rave notices last October—without the "dh." After 64 innings of rousing baseball spread over 10 days, they were still deadlocked with two outs in the eighth inning of the seventh game. Then Darrell Johnson of the Red Sox took a classic gamble under the "old" rules: He elected to pinch hit for his best relief pitcher, Jim Willoughby. The pinch-hitter grounded out, Willoughby left the game and a rookie pitcher named Jim Burton surrendered the run that decided the series in the final inning of the final game.

"I would've got that hit in the ninth no matter who was pitching," said Joe Morgan, whose single to center field finally beat the Red Sox.

"What they're trying to do," suggested Mike Lum, "is to get the designated hitter into the National League—by degrees. It's like Pete Rozelle trying to settle the O.J. Simpson dispute 'for the good of football.'"

"It all matters who you are," Morgan said. "Do you think Rozelle would get involved if it wasn't O.J.?"

"It matters who you are," Tony Perez agreed. "I saw the man walk you the other night to pitch to George Foster with the bases loaded. That's respect."

"I don't want respect," Little Joe replied, getting baseball back to basics. "I want r.b.i.'s."

Csonka Is Listed by Giants As 'Doubtful' for Steelers

By AL HARVIN

The main question that hung over the New York Giants' camp last night as they reported in following their two exhilarating victories in four days was: Will Larry Csonka's neck injury prevent him from playing against the Steelers on Friday night in Pittsburgh?

The answer depends on who's talking. Csonka is willing and thinks he'll be ready to play. The X-rays of his neck, hurt in a face-mask incident in Oilers' game, were negative and his only complaint is that he has a sore neck.

However, the official Giants' word is that Csonka is "very doubtful." Apparently Coach Bill Arnsparger doesn't want to risk his star fullback unnecessarily against the two-time Super Bowl champion Steelers.

The major injury in the Houston game belonged to Charlie Ford, a reserve cornerback who sustained torn knee ligaments and will most likely miss the entire season. He was operated on by Dr. John Marshall, the Giants new orthopedic surgeon, in the Hospital for Special Surgery in Manhattan yesterday.

While the Giants were busy playing two games in four days, a new team of physicians took over. Besides Dr. Marshall, the Giants named Dr. Allan Levy, who has been the doctor for the New York Nets for the last nine years and will also remain in that post, as the new team doctor.

Dr. Marshall, head of the Sports Clinic at the Hospital for Special Surgery, works closely with Dr. Levy and has operated, for instance, on the knees of Julius Erving, the Nets' star forward. They replaced Dr. Rudy Bono, the Giant team physician for the last eight years, and Dr. Ray Cuneff, an orthopedic surgeon who joined the club prior to the 1974 season.

"Dr. Cunneff lives in Red Bank, and the five-hour trip[2½ hours each way] he had to make every day was just too much for him," said Andy Robustelli, the Giants' director of operations. "The trip doesn't normally take that long, but in the morning when he had to leave and at night when he had to go back the traffic was the heaviest.

"Dr. Bono was very busy, also, and we needed someone who could put in more time. The important thing though is that both Dr. Levy and Dr. Marshall are involved in sports medicine."

"I worked with Andy when I was team physician for the Brooklyn Dodgers in the Continental Football League," said the 49-year-old Levy, who was also team physician for the Westchester Bulls, the former New York Giants farm club, and for one year with the New York Islanders. He and the 40-year-old Marshall have consulted with each other for several years.

Adversity Hits Packers and Patriots

By WILLIAM N. WALLACE
Special to The New York Times

FOXBORO, Mass., Aug. 16 — Last night's exhibition game here between the Green Bay Packers and the New England Patriots, ostensibly "won" by the Packers, 16-14, will not be long remembered except for the adversities experienced and exposed by both sides. The list was long, indicative of the difficulties a coach, such as Bart Starr or Chuck Fairbanks, faces in getting a lesser team ready for the National Football League season, which will open in 27 days. For openers Jim Carter broke a forearm. He will be out until mid-October, at least, and he is one of the few quality players Starr has at hand. The replacement for Green Bay at middle linebacker, the keystone of the defense, is a rookie from Pittsburgh named Tom Perko, a fourth-round draft choice.

About Pro Football

"He's all we've got left," said Starr of Perko, who had a hard time handling the inside rushes of Sam Cunningham, the Patriots' able fullback.

Other adversities pale compared to losing the star middle linebacker with a bone fracture in a dumb preseason game. But they were there.

Fairbanks is trying to replace Jim Plunkett, an exceptional quarterback traded away to San Francisco, with a lesser talent, Steve Grogan, as every Patriot zealot focuses on Grogan's every move with the media fanning the flames. Boston sports fans perhaps more than others enjoy stress, embarrassment and failure of their own kind.

Although Grogan's numbers last night were good—15 completions of 26 pass attempts for 216 yards, one touchdown, two interceptions — the best Fairbanks could say of him was, "he did some things good, some things not so good."

In the former category would be a 46-yard scoring pass to Randy Vataha, who made the play by running past the Green Bay cornerback, Perry Smith, on a stop-go pattern and making a fine catch. In the latter would be Grogan's last pass, intercepted by Charlie Hall with one minute remaining which deprived the Patriots of the chance to try for a game-winning field goal.

Apart from the two interceptions, the Patriots lost four fumbles and were penalized six times, three holding penalties coming in the first quarter along with two of the fumbles and one interception.

"We got to cut down our errors," said Fairbanks, a 43-year-old native of Charlevoix, Mich. How? "If I knew, I'd bottle it and sell it." These events suggested this team, which won three of 11 games last year, is more than 27 days away from being ready to start the season.

The same goes for the Packers. Because of expen- sive quarterback tra John Hadl in 1974 a for Lynn Dickey las Green Bay has co much of its future to He completed 12 of 1 in the first preseas but then came dow torn muscle in the arm. He can neithe nor play.

"I don't know w going to get him ba the grim Starr, wh than most knows t of a good quarterb cause he was so goo really hurts us." T team is in effect wi Dickey's injury.

The quarterback was Carlos Brown tous 12th-round dr of 1975 who played in college at the U of Pacific. Even sacked six times pretty good but pe good enough to hi ers out of last plac division. They won 14 games last sea first as head coac 42-year-old Starr.

Holtz Cuts His College Star

Dave Buckey, the quarterback who led the North Carolina State football team to four bowl appearances under Coach Lou Holtz, was cut yesterday by the New York Jets. The man who did the cutting was Holtz, now coach of the Jets.

"It was the most disappointing thing I've had to do in training camp," said Holtz, who drafted Buckey on the 13th round. "Dave, in a large part, is responsible for me being here. But I have to judge him on his performance. I know he's capable, but I have to be fair to all those who are here and want to win."

Buckey's twin brother, Don, a wide receiver, is still on the Jets' roster. The Jets also released John Taylor, a tackle; William McDaniel, an end; Ed Shubert, a linebacker, and Greg Kogal, a quarterback.

Niki Lauda, still the leader in the Grand Prix auto racing standing despite a serious accident in the German Grand Prix two weeks ago, has been released from a hospital in Ludwigshafen, West Germany. Lauda, who suffered severe burns in the crash at Nurbuergring, said he intended to return to auto racing, but was not sure when he would be fit.

"I am satisfied with my rate of recovery," he said before going to his home in Hof, Austria. "I have to go back to Ludwigshafen for a checkup next week, but I won't need a further operation."

The coach of Houston McTear, the sprinter who tied the world record of 9.0 seconds for the 100-yard dash when he was in the 11th grade feels that the sprinter's best performances are in the past.

"His chances of going to the Olympics in four years are slim unless he goes to school and trains for four years," said Will Willoughby in Miami. "He's got to do it on his own. Nobody can do it for him. He's got to get his mind together."

McTear qualified for the Olympic team, but pulled up lame during training in Plattsburgh, N. Y. "I told him I was sorry he was hurt, but that was just the way life is," said Willoughby. "It was his own fault that he injured himself and I told him so. He injured himself running a relay in practice and he wasn't even on any of the relay teams. He was out there fooling around.

With the luxury of an 11½-game lead over the Pittsburgh Pirates in the National League's Eastern Division, Manager Danny Ozark of the Philadelphia Phillies was not overly disturbed to learn that Jim Kaat has a hairline fracture of the left kneecap. Ozark plans to rest the left-handed pitcher, who has a 10-8 won-lost record, for two weeks. He will not be placed on the disabled list.

the signing of their No. 1

The Phillies also announced choice in the free-agent draft, Jeff Kraus, an 18-year-old shortstop from Cincinnati. Kraus, a 6-foot-2-inch high school all-America halfback in football, received more than 50 college scholarship offers.

"There has been a great deal of progress made with our team this year," said Tal Smith, general manager of the Houston Astros, in announcing that Manager Bill Virdon and his coaching staff would be retained for 1977 on one-year contracts. Virdon, who was dropped last season by the New York Yankees, was hired last Aug. 19.

Briscoe Victor In Fifth Round

PHILADELPHIA, Aug. 16 (UPI)—Benny Briscoe floored Emeterio Villanueva twice and went on to score a fifth-round technical knockout tonight when his bleeding opponent was not allowed to continue the middleweight boxing match. Briscoe weighed 160 pounds to Villanueva's 159.

Dr. Alfred Ayella of the state athletic commission stopped the bout before the bell for the fifth round, Villanueva, previously unbeaten, had been cut above both eebrows.

3 Collegians Ineligible

HUNTINGTON, W. Va., Aug. 16 (UPI)—Marshall University's basketball fortunes darkened today with the announcement that three players had been declared academically ineligible. Failing to make "normal academic progress," as defined by Marshall's regulations, were Tim Meadows, Frank Steele and Earl Williams.

the right sideline into the end zone. Bakken converted to bring the score to 17-10. The Cardinals clinched the victory on Bakken's field goal late in the fourth qquarter after they were stopped on the Chargers' 3-yard line.

The Cardinals led, 3-0, in the first quarter on a 30-yard field goal by Bakken. They took a 10-0 lead early in the second quarter after Jerry Latin ran 9 yards and Wayne Morris 5 yards for a first down on the Chargeers' 15. Bill Donkers then passed to Pat Tilley for the touchdown and Bakken converted for the extra point.

The Chargers scored with 4 seconds left in the first half on Albert's 30-yard field goal.

Last January an American college all-star "Japan Bowl" game drew 68,000 spectators to Tokyo's 70,000-seat National Stadium.

Korakuen Stadium was chosen over the larger National Stadium for the Mainichi Star Bowl because its AstroTurf could be played on even in the rain.

The gridiron was a tight fit in the small stadium usually reserved for baseball, offering the possibility that one of the players might run through the end zone and into one of the baseball dugouts.

In the former category would be a 46-yard scoring pass to Randy Vataha, who made the play by running past the Green Bay cornerback, Perry Smith, on a stop-and-go pattern and making a fine catch. In the latter would be Grogan's last pass intercepted by Charlie Hall with one minute remaining which deprived the Patriots of the chance to try for a game-winning field goal.

Apart from the two interceptions, the Patriots lost four fumbles and were penalized six times, three holding penalties coming in the first quarter along with two of the fumbles and the interception.

"We got to cut down our errors," said Parcells, a 43-year-old native of Charleston, West Virginia. "I knew, I'd bottle it and sell it." There were a number of times last year when more than 11 guys would show from being ready to start the season.

AT CINCINNATI — Fred Norman struck out 10 batters, the best effort by a Cincinnati pitcher this season. But it was not good enough. The Reds' southpaw also gave up a leadoff homer in the seventh to Vic Correll and that proved to be the difference. Norman lost his third game against 11 victories. The winner was Carl Morton (3-9), but Adrian Devine saved the game for Atlanta. Devine relieved Morton with two runs in, a runner on third and two out in the eighth. He retired Tony Perez, shutting off Cincinnati's rally.

Victory at 7-2¼, Is Jeered in Nice

NICE, France, Aug. 16 (Reuters) — Dwight Stones, the American world-record holder, was booed and hissed by spectators in a crowd of 10,000 after winning the high jump at an international track and field meet tonight.

Stones, the Olympic favorite to win the gold medal but who took the bronze medal for third place at Montreal, broke his world record at 7 feet 7¼ inches the following week in Philadelphia. He won the high jump tonight at 7-2¼. When he refused to attempt any greater height, the crowd vented its displeasure.

Canadian Woman Trapshoot Victor

VANDALIA, Ohio, Aug. 16 (AP) — Susan Nattrass of Hamilton, Ontario, won the Women's AA championship today during the Class Day events in the 77th annual Grand American trapshooting tournament. Miss Nattrass, twice a member of Canada's Olympic trapshooting team, broke a perfect 200 in taking the women's title.

Also assured of victory were Lawrence and Gerald Russo of Carlstadt, N.J., each of whom recorded perfect 200's in winning the brother-brother title.

A's Back In Race, Hopeful

By LEONARD KOPPETT
Special to The New York Times

OAKLAND, Calif., Aug. 16 —Carrying a nine-game winning streak, high spirits and a conviction that they can overtake Kansas City for a sixth straight Western Division title, the Oakland A's headed East today for a trip through Milwaukee, Boston and Baltimore in the best frame of mind they've had this year. They are seven games behind with 45 to play.

"We think we're going to catch them," said Manager Chuck Tanner, staying on a theme he has been repeating since May. "We play them six times in the last 12 days, and we think we can be close enough before that to do the job. Then, if they do beat us, we'll just tip our hats to them and go home."

Most of the A's players, from Sal Bando, the captain, on down, have been talking the last week about how the pressure will start to tell on the Royals. After losing five straight in Minnesota, the A's came home and sliced five games off the Kansas City margin in one week.

"It's got to bother them, to see us coming on like this," said Bando. "We've been there before, and they haven't. We look at the scoreboard to see how they do, but we know they look to see how we do."

A Big Victory

Yesterday's 8-7 victory over the Boston Red Sox, achieved with two ninth-inning runs after two were out, and after Boston led following the first three innings, 6-0, was the sort of game Bando had in mind. A Kansas City victory had already been posted on the scoreboard.

"It's worth much more than just one victory in the standings," he said, "and when they read about how we won it, they'll know what it means."

And Charles O. Finley, the owner, in one of his rare on-the-scene appearances, expressed the same idea. "This is our biggest win of the year," said Finley, who usually takes the games by telephone in Chicago, but who turned up yesterday and startled Frank Cienszyk, the loyal equipment manager who had never before seen Finley wearing his new hairpiece and almost didn't recognize him.

"Kansas City's looking over their shoulder now," he went on, "They will choke because they haven't been there before. They can put that statement right on their clubhouse wall. They'll read it so much they'll believe it."

Another sign that the A's may be on their traditional championship course is the renewed flow of uninhibited comment from their clubhouse. The other day, Gene Tenace declared he would be gone next year after playing out his option, and that he was shamefully underpaid.

Running Is Key

The fact is, the A's have a way of separating on-field concentration from off-field to a remarkable degree. And in baseball terms, over the last few weeks, their pitching has sharpened up, their defense has tightened and the hitters have been improving toward their normal levels. And the relief pitching has been spectacular.

But the main thing is their running game, and it was the key to the victory that provided such an emotional lift yesterday. They came to bat in the eighth trailing, 7-4, and the way they scored the two runs that made the ninth inning possible was a textbook example of how they play.

Bert Campaneris walked. As he broke for second, Don Baylor hit a routine grounder through the vacated right side for a single instead of an out or even a double play. That put Campaneris on third. Then Taylor took off for second as Joe Rudi grounded to short. It was a perfect double-play grounder, except that Baylor was already on second, so Rick Burleson had to throw to first for one out while Campaneris scored.

Bando bounced an infield hit off the third baseman's glove, but Baylor, instead of staying at second, came on to third. Bando then stole second, eliminating another double-play possibility, and that paid off because Tenace's grounder to short became only the second out while Baylor scored from third.

The ninth was instructive, too. Cesar Tovar got himself hit by a pitch, and after Phil Garner fouled off two bunts before flying out, Tovar tried to steal and was thrown out. But Billy North doubled to left, Campy poked a single through the right side tying the score, and he continued to second on the unsuccessful throw home. Thereupon Baylor's looper to center fell among four converging Boston players and Campaneris scored the winning run.

...ing the bright yellow foul pole.

"I hit it good," the 29-year-old shortstop said, "but after I took two or three steps, I saw it starting to hook and I said, 'Oh Heck.' It was a shock that the ball went out of there in the first place. I haven't hit the ball that hard in a long time."

But with the count at 3-2, Stanley hit Perry's fastball even harder.

"When I hit it, I knew it was going out," Stanley said. "I hit it hard enough so it couldn't hook as much as the first one."

The homer was the fourth of his major league career—in 762 times at bat—and his first one since Sept. 1, 1973, when he hit the last grand-slam homer in the old Yankee Stadium. That one, off Kevin Kobel of Milwaukee, hit the foul pole. Stanley easily recalled the other home runs, too—the first off Jim Perry, Gaylord's brother, and the second off Denny McLain of Detroit, both in 1971.

A .219 career hitter, Stanley has torn into opposing pitchers at a .408 pace (20 for 49) in his last 17 games, raising his average from .202 to .275.

"I can afford to be more aggressive knowing I'm going to be playing every day," he explained.

Hunter Hits Spots

Hunter has been pitching every fourth day recently instead of every fifth, as he had for most of the season, and that could be the difference in his pitching.

"I don't feel as strong," he said, "so I have to go out and throw to spots instead of trying to throw the ball past everybody. Pitching a game like this makes me feel I know how to pitch instead of going out and pitching two or three good innings and ten a bad inning. It makes you feel like you know how to pitch again."

Hunter had the Rangers shut out to five hits until the ninth, when Mike Hargrove doubled, went to third on Jeff Burroughs's single and scored on Roy Howell's fly.

Second-inning doubles by Carlos May and Nettles gave the Yankees their first run and they added two in the third on Rivers's homer, Munson's single and a double by Chambliss for his 80th run batted in.

Rivers got his eighth homer on a fly to deep center that Juan Beniquez should have caught. But as the center fielder went to make a basket catch of the drive, Burroughs, chugging over from right field, appeared to step in front of him. The ball bounced off Beniquez's glove and took off in the direction of right field as Rivers zipped in the direction of home plate.

The fans roared and clapped, and they didn't even have to put down their hot dogs and beers to do it.

Cosmos' Chief Task: Beat Diplomats Tonight

By ALEX YANNIS

Think Washington, and don't be concerned about Tampa is now urged on the New York Cosmos by their coach.

"We cannot let ourselves think ahead to Tampa," Gordon Bradley, the coach, said yesterday as he prepared his squad for tonight's playoff game against the Diplomats at Shea Stadium. The winner will advance to a meeting with the league champions on Friday.

"Even though the two games against Tampa were emotional and there is such a rivalry between us, we hope to beat Washington first," Bradley said before a workout at Shea.

The Cosmos gained the North American Soccer League playoffs for the first time since 1973. The only title the team captured was in 1972, when it had the league's leading scorer, Randy Horton, in the lineup. This season, Giorgio Chinaglia became the second Cosmos player to lead the league in scoring.

Is this an omen?

The Cosmos don't believe so. "To win the title, you have to prove you are the best," Bradley said recently. "Everybody we play, we are going to attack from the beginning. We want to create an early advantage."

With the most productive group in the league—65 goals in 24 games—the Cosmos show scoring power. The club beat Washington, 5-0, the last time they met at Yankee Stadium, but the Diplomats edged them, 3-2, on their home field in Fairfax, Va.

The Cosmos have not played at Shea Stadium before and Bradley said yesterday he believed the home-field advantage would be nullified. "But it's still our home game and we should win it," he added.

Except, perhaps, for Dave Clements, Bradley will have his players in top physical condition. Ramon Mifflin, Bob Smith, Chinaglia and Pelé have all recovered from minor injuries and Bradley is counting on their services tonight. Pelé hurt his nose and Chinaglia lacerated his left leg against Miami last Tuesday night.

The N.A.S.L. follows the National Football League's example and makes each playoff pairing a one-game affair.

In another playoff game tonight, Rochester will be at Toronto. Tomorrow night Los Angeles will play at Dallas and Vancouver will play the Sounders at Seattle's Kingdome, size of Soccer Bowl-76.

Pelé rushed to the 21 Club after practice yesterday to announce the establishment of a trophy to be awarded annually to an American or a Canadian player in the league. The award, donated by Pepsi-Cola in honor of Pelé, will carry a $10,000 prize.

Selection of the annual winner will be made by journalists in league cities, with Pelé as the chairman of the selection board. The first award will be given prior to Soccer Bowl-76.

Young Bowler Curbs English Batsmen

LONDON, Aug. 16 (Reuters)—Michael Holding was the West Indian hero on the fourth day of the fifth cricket test match at the Oval today as England battled to save some prestige in the series which ends tomorrow. Pounding the ball down on a lifeless pitch, The 22-year-old fast bowler took eight England first innings wickets for 92 in the best test performance by a West Indian paceman.

England, replying to the West Indian first innings of 687 for eight declared, made 435, mainly thanks to a brave double-century from Dennis Amiss. The West Indies did not enforce the follow on, despite a lead of 252. Instead Roy Fredericks and Geoff Greenidge, the visitor's openers, went on a run feast and lashed 182 without loss in 140 minutes before the West Indians declared again. At the close, England was 43 for no wicket, still 391 behind.

Lisciotti Triumphs in Billiards

ASBURY PARK, N. J., Aug. 16—Shortly before 5 A.M. today, 29-year-old Larry Lisciotti of Manchester, Conn., became the winner of the first World open pocket-billiard championship. In the final match of the double-elimination tournament, he defeated Steve Mizerak, 30, of Edison, N.J., in their two games, 150-47 and 150-108. Mizerak had defeated Lisciotti previously and was unbeaten going into the final match.

The tournament was sponsored by the Professional Pool Players Association, a recently formed group that broke from the Billiard Congress of America because of the decreasing amounts of the cash prizes. Of the $50,000 in prizes awarded at this tournament, Lisciotti received $10,000. Mizerak got $5,000 for second place.

Astros Avoid Philadelphia Hotel

HOUSTON, Aug. 16 (AP)—The Houston Astros will be staying in a different hotel on Thursday when they open a four-game series in Philadelphia. They normally stay at the Bellevue Stratford, but the change was made because of the mysterious sickness that caused 25 deaths since an American Legion convention in the city last month.

Campo Entry Runs 1,2,3 at Saratoga

At the Race Tracks

Following Harvest Girl, ridden by Jean Cruguet, were Arlene Schwartz's Bonnie Empress, ridden by Jorge Velasquez, two lengths back, and Elmendorf's Drama Critic, ridden by Braulio Baeza, closing well to finish third.

The winner was timed in 1:11⅕ for the six furlongs and the entry paid $5.80 and $6. There was no show wagering, with only four betting interests in the seven-horse race. The even-money choice, the W. C. Stephens-trained entry of Mrs. Warren and Negotiator, finished fifth and fourth, respectively, resulting in the unusual mutuel payments.

George Martens was unseated from his mount, Maria's Baby, coming out of the starting gate. He was unhurt.

At Yonkers . . .

Keystone Ore, Stanley Dancer's colt, is the first of the top 3-year-olds to enter Saturday's $200,000 Cane Pace.

A head victor over Armbro Ranger last Saturday in the Adios Pace, Keystone Ore is co-holder at 1:56 of the fastest mile this year on a five-eighths of a mile track and holds the world mark of 1:56 2-5 for colts on a half-mile track.

At Keystone...

Dan Lasater's Amberope carried Jorge Tejiera through six furlongs in 1:11 for a 1½-length victory over French Whistler.

The winner, an 8-year-old gelding, paid $3.60, $2.80 and $2.10. French Whistler returned $6.20 and $2.60 and Heed the Word paid $2.40 to show.

At Rockingham...

Bastly, ridden by Jack Kurtz, took the feature, rallying in the stretch to win by two lengths over Tansy Bitters.

The winner, clocked in 1:44 for the mile and 70 yards, paid $4.40, $3.40 and $2.40. Tansy Bitters paid $11 and $4.20 and Motormouth Eckman was $4 to show.

Federation Cup Draws Fire on South Africans

were "a regular, routine thing."

"Davis Cup gets them all the time," she said.

She said that "normal" security precautions had been taken and that both the Philadelphia Police Department and the Federal Bureau of Investigation were aware of any potential disruptions at the tournament.

There have been telephone inquiries to the Federation Cup office concerning whether the South African team would indeed compete and when it would compete. There are no plans to bar South Africa.

The Federation Cup, an annual competition, is sponsored by the International Lawn Tennis Federation, which has responsibility for selecting the competing teams. South Africa is the sixth-seeded team in the tournament, which is being played in the United States for only the second time.

Team members not yet in Philadelphia are to arrive over the next few days. Two South African women—each country may name as many as four players to the national team—were in Philadelphia yesterday, Ilana Kloss and Brigitte Cuypers.

"We haven't heard anything about any threats," said Miss Kloss. "We haven't had any troubles the last three years I've played Federation Cup, and I hope we don't now. As far as we're concerned, we're just here to play tennis. What happens at home [the recent riots in Soweto] has nothing to do with us."

Recently 30 nations, primarily black African, boycotted the Olympic Games in Montreal, protesting New Zealand's sending a rugby team to tour South Africa, which has a government policy of racial separation. There are no black African nations entered in the Federation Cup, and Mrs. McGoldrick said yesterday that no nation had threatened not to play because of the presence of any other nation.

Waldman, a Harvard junior, held a commanding lead when Oranski stopped play because he felt ill. Waldman defeated Steve Vallely of Palo Alto, Calif., 6-1, 6-4, in his second match.

Chris Lewis of Los Angeles, seeded sixth, was extended by Larry Stefanski of Los Altos Hills, Calif., before winning, 4-6, 7-6, 6-3.

Dropouts in Canada

TORONTO, Aug. 16 (UPI) — The $150,000 Canadian open began today, more distinguished for its absences than for the players assembled here.

Prior to the start of the tournament, two of the top men players, Ilie Nastase of Rumania and Adriano Panatta of Italy, dropped out.

Four more withdrawals were announced just before the start, including Tom Gorman, 12th seeded, and Marcie Louie, the defending women's champion. Gorman was suffering from a bad back and Louie was reported ill. The other two last-minute withdrawals were 14th-seeded Karl Meiler of West Germany and Brazil's Tomas Koch.

In the first round, Australia's Geoff Masters defeated Canada's Rejean Genois, 6-2, 7-5; Paulo Bertolucci of Italy beat Egypt's Ismael El Shafei, 6-3, 4-6, 6-2; South Africa's Byron Bertram beat Victor Amaya, 6-7, 7-5, 6-3, and Juan Gisbert of Spain defeated Jeff Borowiak, 2-6, 6-4, 6-4.

Stockton Takes Second P.G.A. Title

green and his subsequent chip shot drew a groan from the gallery as his ball stopped a dozen feet short of the cup. But a minute or two later he was the winner.

Stockton became a serious factor in bright sunshine and moderate temperatures at the long 10th hole, where January double-bogeyed by hitting an approach shot into a lateral water hazard. January had replaced Nicklaus as a contender after Nicklaus had replaced Morgan, who had passed Coody in earlier action. For two holes, Graham and January had the best scores.

Stockton had the lowest score above par for the entire trip on the back nine, although January matched him at 13 and 14. But the Texan fell off with two straight bogeys before his birdie finale.

Pin placements today were costly for Nicklaus and length was a struggle for Stockton, who was not only short on his approach at 18 but also was short at 10, where he took charge. But he got down in two from the fringe of 10 and took it from there.

The top prize of $45,000 raised Stockton's 1976 earnings to $89,262 and his 12-year tour career earnings to $903,746. Floyd and January earned $20,000 apiece, and Floyd became the 17th man on the tour to go over $100,000 this year. He has $118,746 for 1976.

Nicklaus Wavers

Dave Hill collected $2,064 for his 288 score and became the 11th pro golfer to exceed $1 million in career earnings. Hill has $1,000,660 for his 18-year career.

Other $1 million winners are Nicklaus, Palmer, Billy Casper, Tom Weiskopf, Gary Player, Bruce Crampton, Miller Barber, Gene Littler, Lee Trevino and Johnny Miller.

Nicklaus began slipping at the sixth hole, just when he appeared to be taking command and seemed a good bet to win the P.G.A. for the fifth time. He got on the skids by taking what appeared to be an unnecessarily risky shot directly at the No. 6 pin.

This hole, which plays a par 5 for Congressional members, was a 456-yard par 4 for this tourney. And it had one of the most difficult pin placements on the course today. The hole was behind a right bunker and within 20 yards of a small pond to the right of the green.

Instead of going for the middle of the green, Nicklaus went for the pin. The ball carried over the trap, but landed to the right of the pin and kicked into the water hazard. A poor chip from the deep fringe grass and two putts gave Nicklaus a double-bogey 6. He went on to bogey the eighth, 10th, 12th and 14th holes.

It all happened shortly before Arnold Palmer, who has never won a P.G.A. title, finished with two-over-par 72 for 287. Arnie had thrilled his Army with a 68 on Saturday.

Gary Player, the 1962 and 1972 P.G.A. champion, went out in par 35 to stay at one over par for the tourney. Then, as suddenly as Nicklaus, the South African fell away with four consecutive bogeys.

Weiskopf, the first-round leader with a 65, was the only man to go against the final day's trend and string charge. He birdied 15, 16 and charge. He birdied 15, 16 and 17, but it was too late as he wound up with 284 after shooting 74, 73, 72 in his last three rounds.

Playoffs to Open for Sets With Triangles Tonight

The New York Sets, with the best regular-season record, face the resurging Pittsburgh Triangles tonight in Pittsburgh in the opening game of the World Team Tennis Eastern Division playoffs.

The winner of the two-of-three series will meet the survivor of the Western Division playoff between Phoenix and Golden Gate.

The Sets won five of six regular-season meetings from the Triangles. But Pittsburgh has won 15 of its last 19 matches under its new coach, Dan McGibbeny, a 25-year-old who has never played tennis.

"Basically, my job is to keep spirits high and to keep everything organized," said McGibbeny, who left his position as general manager of the team at the request of Frank Fuhrer, the owner.

The big question for the Sets will be in women's singles, where they have lost all six sets to the Triangles, five to Evonne Goolagong. Mrs. Billie Jean King's only two losses in 14 singles sets during the regular season were to Miss Goolagong. By contrast, the Sets hold a 5-1 edge over the Triangles in women's doubles.

The second match in the series will be played tomorrow night at the Nassau Coliseum. If a third match is necessary, it will be held Thursday night, also at the Coliseum.

There will be no bear hunting in the Catskills this year, in order to increase the population of the animals in that region, according to Peter A. A. Berle, commissioner of Environmental Conservation for New York State.

Commodity brokerage profits do not reflect just trading volume. Most houses trade for their own account as well as "retail" clients and are subject to the same fortunes of the marketplace.

Unlike their clients, however, it is the brokerage houses that are responsible for making good on all trades on each exchange. In cases where the client can't or won't pay his obligation, the broker must clear his accounts with the exchange each day—and then go after the delinquent customer.

KORVETTES CALLS SUNDAY PACE GOOD

Hourly Sales Are Found the Best of Any Day in Week Except for Saturday

By HERBERT KOSHETZ

Korvettes reported yesterday that sales for the 18 stores it opened in the metropolitan area on Sunday were the best on an hourly basis of any day of the week except Saturday.

Other New York department stores, however, were unwilling to commit themselves on when they would follow Korvettes' lead in taking advantage of a New York State Court of Appeals ruling that allows Sunday-store openings.

Korvettes opened 18 of its 23 metropolitan area stores on Sunday from 11 A.M. to 5 P.M. It did not, however, open its three Manhattan stores — at Lexington Avenue and 44th Street, at Broadway and 34th Street, and at Fifth Avenue and 47th Street—its Bronx store and its store in Lawrence, L.I.

Advertising Lack Cited

"I would say that business was good considering that there was no advertising of the event," Herbert Ricklin, vice president of Korvettes for industrial and public relations, said yesterday.

Korvettes' decision to open on Sunday was made on Friday and, as a result, the chain had no opportunity to place advertisements in newspapers or prepare special promotions.

"From here on in, there will be advertising," Mr. Ricklin said.

A spokesman for Macy's said that the exact date for its Sunday openings had not been determined. However, he added, Sunday openings would apply to all branches in the metropolitan area where they were allowed. He added that in New Haven, where local law prohibits doing business on Sunday, Macy's would not open.

Gimbels Date in Doubt

Robert Gottlieb, vice president for sales promotion of the Gimbels New York division, said the stores would definitely be open on Sunday, but the exact date was still in doubt.

He added that the company had as its target date a Sunday early in September, adding that the stores affected would be the two New York City branches, the Westchester store, two stores in Nassau County and two in Suffolk County.

Alexander's has not as yet made a decision on Sunday openings, a spokesman said yesterday. However, it is understood that the company will open once it appears certain that other department stores are staying open on Sunday.

Stores that still have made no decision on Sunday openings include Abraham & Straus and Crewmen aboard an oil tanker hooking up pipelines to empty the ship in Bayonne, N.J. The United States has become increasingly vulnerable to an oil embargo because of increased imports this year from Arab states.

SALE OF ARAB OIL TO U.S. IS DOUBLED

Crude Shipments in the First Half of Year Accounted for 12.4% of Demand

NO THREAT OF EMBARGO

Imports Rose 4.74 Million Barrels a Day From 3.71 Million in 1975 Period

By WILLIAM D. SMITH

The United States doubled its dependence on direct supplies of Arab-produced crude oil during the first half of 1976, according to a recent survey by The Petroleum Intelligence Weekly, an authoritative trade publication.

Crude-oil shipments from Arab nations in the first half of this year supplied the United States with 12.4 percent of its total oil demand, compared with only 6.8 percent a year earlier, according to the report. Indirect shipments from the Arab nations through Caribbean refineries and then to the United States in the form of petroleum products further increased American dependence on Arab sources, according to energy analysis.

Vulnerability Grows

The situation leaves the United States more vulnerable to an Arab oil embargo than at any time in its history, as a number of administration officials have recently warned.

In late July, Secretary of Commerce Elliot L. Richardson said, "If another embargo were imposed the results would be literally catastrophic."

Students of oil and politics are quick to note that the Arab oil producers have not threatened an embargo. On the other hand, Frank G. Zarb, the Federal Energy Administrator, in an interview in The Mideast Report, a newsletter, noted that the Arab producers had not said "we will not resume a political embargo." "Absent of that, I have to assume that it is possible," he added.

According to the Petroleum Intelligence report, crude oil imports rose to 4.74 million barrels a day in the first half of 1976 from 3.71 million barrels a day in the first half of 1975.

Supplies Through Caribbean

The entire increase of a million barrels a day in crude oil imports was met by Arab oil, which rose to 2.1 million barrels a day, or 44 percent, of the 4.7 million barrels a day of total imports. In 1975, Arab producers accounted for only 29 percent of crude-oil supplies.

The first half of 1976 also saw Saudi Arabia pass Venezuela as the chief supplier of crude oil and products to the United States, a position the South American country has held since before World War II.

In the first half of this year the Saudis supplied the United States with 1.09 million barrels a day of crude oil, compared with 578,000 barrels a day during the first half of last year. The Saudis also supplied some

Mr. Seagle added that the investor's eye was on the political scene and not on interest rates, money supply or price indexes. He said that the big question mark was whose policies would guide the Republican Presidential campaign.

The analyst predicted that the technical strength that had been building under the market's surface "should be evident shortly for all to see."

Turnover on the exchange continued light, although it showed improvement over Friday's sluggish trading. Volume yesterday advanced to 16.21 million shares from 13.93 million on Friday.

Consolidated trading of stocks listed on the Big Board rose to 19.44 million shares from 16.63 million shares on Friday.

Purchase by Fed Of Treasury Bills Aids Dole Rise

By JOHN H. ALLAN

The Federal Reserve moved actively yesterday to keep short-term interest rates from rising as some $8 billion shifted from the commercial banking system to the Treasury when investors paid for the notes and bonds they purchased during the first week in August.

Credit Markets

The central bank purchased Treasury bills for its own account and it negotiated three-day repurchase agreements and it also purchased about $330 million of Treasury bills for some of the international or Government accounts that it handles.

The action helped offset the drain in reserves in the banking system that stemmed from the payment for the notes and bonds that the Treasury sold two weeks ago to refund $3 billion of securities that matured Sunday and to raise approximately $6.3 billion of new money.

As these money flows get under way, the Federal funds rate started to move up, and the central bank made its money-injecting moves when

Mark and Yen Stronger Against Dollar As Strains in the European Float Ease

The West German mark and the Japanese yen, two of the world's strongest currencies, in recent tumultuous foreign-exchange trading, gained strength against the dollar yesterday but strains within the European float eased.

Despite the increases in these closely watched currencies, trading in other currencies was light yesterday, reflecting the part the Assumption Day bank holiday in France. The pound and the French franc, which have been among the weakest currencies, ended the day virtually unchanged.

Of more concern to international economic experts is the situation with the joint float of the Nrs. German mark, Dutch guilder, Belgian and Luxembourg francs, Danish krone and the Swedish krona, which is on the verge of falling apart. The float, currencies are allowed to fluctuate only within 2.25 percent of each other.

Yesterday, pressure on the Belgian franc and on the guilder which lately has been intense, eased, in part because of an increase in Belgian and Dutch interest rates Friday. An increase in interest rates creates a demand for a currency through investors eager to move their money towards the higher interest rates.

Trading Limits

Both the Belgian and Dutch currencies closed the day within the trading limits set by the joint float agreement and were sharply higher against the dollar.

"It's all a reflection of strains in the float," commented Thomas J. Devine, vice president for foreign exchange of the Manufacturers Hanover Trust Company. "The float is falling apart. Either Germany revalues or the Belgians and the Dutch won't be able to stay in. It's the same old story of too many different economies."

For its part, the yen, which has been under considerable upward pressure, also rose. Finance ministers have voiced concern recently that Japanese authorities have depressed the value of the yen to stimulate trade, although Japanese trade surpluses have indicated that the yen is undervalued.

Yesterday's increase, to 290.15 yen per dollar from 291 on Friday, came after Japanese authorities hinted last week that efforts by the Bank of Japan to restrict the yen's rise would be less emphatic.

The mark reached a 13-month high, closing at 2.5285 to the

Getty Refund to Sohio Sought by F.E.A.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16 (AP) —Buyers of petroleum products from Standard Oil of Ohio could save $35 million over the next few months as the result of an action by the Federal Energy Administration a spokesman for the agency said today.

The spokesman said the agency had ordered Getty Oil to refund to Sohio $34.8 million in what the F.E.A. contended were overpayments for crude oil obtained by Sohio from Getty. If the order is carried out, Sohio would also be required to pass the money along to consumers in the form of lower prices or delays in any planned price increases.

The order also included a requirement for Getty Oil to pay other domestic refiners $60 million over an alleged failure to fully report Getty's use of price-controlled crude.

Result of Swap Deals

The spokesman said the case grew out of swap transactions between Getty and Sohio from October 1973 to October 1974. During that time, Getty was providing Sohio with domestic oil from Sohio's refineries in return for Sohio crude to feed Getty refining operations in the Middle East.

The trouble, according to the spokesman, was that the oil Getty provided for the swap was price-controlled while the oil Sohio provided was market-priced oil and thus worth more than twice as much as the price-controlled crude.

The $60 million ordered paid to other refiners represents Getty's failure to abide by a Government program to share among all refiners the price deferential between refiners with access to a large amount of price-controlled oil and refiners forced to use higher-priced uncontrolled oil, the spokesman said.

Quaker State Order

The Quaker State Oil Refining Corporation disclosed that it was advised yesterday that a United States District judge had entered an order finding it and the Amoco Oil Company, a unit of Standard Oil of Indi-

National Distillers Rebuffed by France On Vineyard Bid

By ROBERT J. COLE

The French Government appeared yesterday to have blocked efforts of the National Distillers and Chemical Corporation to buy Chateau Margaux, one of the best known vineyards in France. A spokesman for National Distillers maintained however, that the company, which also owns 80 percent of the Almaden Vineyards of California, had no official notification of the Government move.

Merger News

Pierre and Bernard Ginestet, who are brothers belonging to one of the most famous wine families in France, reached an agreement in principle with National Distillers early this year to sell the Margaux properties, subject to the approval of the French Government.

National Distillers refused to disclose the purchase price but market sources placed it at approximately $16 million.

"Informal inquiries have been made to the French," a National Distillers spokesman said, "but to our knowledge no response has been made so far as we're concerned. We haven't heard anything official."

Chateau Margaux is regarded in the wine business as one of the five most famous chateaus in the Bordeaux region of France. A standard 24-ounce bottle of Margaux 1970 is selling in New York for about $26.50.

The Ginestets encountered

The stock exchange in Buenos Aires is in a cavernous, old building on Bank Row. Trading there has been hectic and rewarding since the coup in March. Cheers greet soaring prices posted on chalk boards above the floor.

Argentine Stocks Flourish in Wake of Coup

By JUAN de ONIS

Special to The New York Times

BUENOS AIRES, Aug. 15— A phenomenal boom on the stock exchange here since the Argentine military took power in March has raised the average price of shares traded from the equivalent of 3 cents, before the coup to nearly 50 cents, and volume has expanded.

One American, who invested $10,000 in January and February at the bottom of the market, has made $300,000.

Investors are not only making speculative gains, but also benefiting from a favorable tax climate. There is no capital gains tax in Argentina and only a 5 percent tax on stock transfers. A broker's commission of 1 to 1½ percent is also collected.

The scene at the exchange, a cavernous old building on Bank Row, looks more like a race track on derby day than a securities market. It is jammed during trading hours, from 1 to 3 P.M., by excited crowds equipped with binoculars to see the quotations posted on elevated blackboards over the trading floor.

'Punters' Cheer

Cheers go up from the "punters" as the clerks chalk entries for some "hot" stock on the blackboards. Day-to-day rises of 20 to 40 percent are frequent.

The boom began on the first day of trading, April 5, after the military overthrew the Government of President Isabel Martinez de Peron on March 24. At that time inflation was so out of control that prices were rising more than 50 percent a month.

Speculative funds that are flowing into the exchange houses, where the United States dollar was being sold at the black market rate of 300 pesos. The official value now is 250 pesos. Another attractive investment was one-year Federal bonds adjusted by the value to the Consumer Price Index.

The stock exchange had been flat for months. Share values were so depressed by the chaotic policies of the Peronist regime, that they bore no relationship to either the real assets or the earning capacity of Argentina's major industries, banks and commercial enterprises. Analysts say the boom represents a fundamental correction of prices.

Bank Shares Soar

Shares of Banco de Galicia, a major bank with 40 branches and assets of several hundred million dollars, were selling for 2 pesos in January. Banco de Galica closed Friday at 320 pesos per share. The same pattern has been followed by nearly all bank shares.

Other leaders in the boom have been sugar-company shares, based on a record sugar harvest here, and shares for private Argentine oil companies. They expect to benefit from a new policy

U. S. Banks Raised Investing Overseas In Second Quarter

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16 (AP) — United States banks increased their loans and investments overseas in the second quarter on the strength of stepped up flows of deposits from abroad, the Government reported today.

The Commerce Department said United States banks' loans and other claims on foreigners rose $4.4 billion faster than foreigners repaid their debts during the quarter. That compared with a $3.7 billion increase in the first quarter.

The department said the biggest shifts were in Britain, Mexico and Brazil.

Deposits and other banks' liabilities to foreigners, meanwhile, climbed by $3 billion with about half of the increase accounted for by Caribbean branches of United States banks. The change compared with a $1.3 billion increase in the first quarter of the year.

Other significant changes in United States international transactions, the department said, were a $1.4 billion increase in United States purchases of foreign securities, even though that was smaller than the $2.5 billion increase in the first quarter. Most of the slower growth was attributed to a decline in Canadian issues.

Foreign official assets invested in the United States increased $3.6 billion compared with a $2.4 billion rise in the first quarter. The department said inflows from developing countries, including members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, picked up while official assets of industrialized nations declined.

Con Ed Ranking as Investment Rising

By TERRY ROBARDS

Most of the customers of the Consolidated Edison Company are in New York City, a metropolis whose financial problems are known the world over, and to some extent Con Ed's troubles mirror those of the city.

"Con Ed is virtually a zero growth situation," says a Wall Street analyst. "They're stuck with the territory they have, and we all know what that means—business and industry moving out, people moving out, lots of problems."

Yet the appeal of Con Ed as an investment seems to be improving. Some Wall Street houses are raising their ratings of the big electric and gas utility's bonds and shares in the belief that Con Ed's worst problems are behind it.

Nobody is ranking the company as a blue chip among utility investments; yet a consensus seems to be emerging that the quality of Con Ed's earnings is moving up and that the outlook is better than it has been for several years.

In its annual midyear appraisal of utility issues, Loeb, Rhoades & Company has upgraded Con Ed from Group 3 to Group 2. The firm's highest rating is Group 1, the lowest Group 5.

In its own analysis of electric utility bonds, Bache Halsey Stuart, another big investment house, says Con Ed "continues to improve its position." Bache notes that the two leading bond rating services, Moody's and Standard & Poor's, are rating Con Ed bonds currently at Baa and BBB, respectively.

"In our view," says Bache, "the quality of this company's earnings deserves an A rating, and despite the poor image of a major portion of the franchise area, an upward adjustment is deserved."

Gerald D. Morgan of Bache cited two factors in the Con Ed outlook that most other analysts seem to agree are crucial: the recent sale of two electricity generating plants to the New York State Power Authority and recent increases granted in rates for electricity and gas.

Four months ago Richard R. Olivere Jr. of Jessup & Lamont concluded in a five-page study of Con Ed: "A realistic regulatory attitude, a leveling of fuel costs, successes of management in dealing with serious obstacles and an improvement of financial and capital ratios lead us to believe that Con Edison stock, at a price of about 17, is presently undervalued."

The issue has been trading lately at between 18 and 19 on the New York Stock Exchange, and Mr. Olivere was asked about his current appraisal. "I think it's still undervalued now," he said. "The trends in earnings and finances are favorable."

While acknowledging that Con Ed shares New York City's tarnished image to some extent, he said that "the importance here is the trend." He added that he expected a dividend increase on the common shares, possibly by next January.

Con Ed's standing in Wall Street touched bottom in the second quarter of 1974, when the dividend was omitted. Utility stocks have always been regarded by investors as income issues that make quarterly payments to shareholders with unflagging regularity.

Cutting out the dividend thus was regarded as a capital crime against stockholders. The shares traded at a low of 6 in 1974, touched a low of 7½ the next year and then began their recovery move. They are still far below the high of 43¾ recorded in 1966.

The dividend was resumed at an annual rate of 80 cents in the third quarter of 1974, was increased to a $1.20 annual rate in the first quarter of 1975 and was moved up again to a $1.60 rate in the first quarter of this year. Prior to the cut in 1974 Con Ed had paid $1.80 annually for nine years.

Crucial to any further dividend raises will be higher earnings. In this year's first half, Con Ed reported earnings of $1.87 a share, up from $1.73 in last year's first half. Net income in the second quarter amounted to 71 cents a share, up narrowly from 69 cents.

Most estimates for the full year place the earnings total at $4 a share or higher. Mr. Olivere is estimating $4 to $4.15 and Standard & Poor's says earnings "are expected to exceed $4," compared with $3.74 a share last year.

Contrary to the trend, Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith thinks Con Ed's 1976 earnings will be flat or perhaps slightly lower than last year's results. On a scale of A to E, with A as the highest, Merrill Lynch ranks Con Ed as a C with an upward-pointing arrow, meaning the rating could improve.

Merrill's appraisal of the longer-term potential for Con Ed is "O.K. to buy"—hardly enthusiastic, but not far out of line with many of the other Wall Street evaluations.

average of 65 stocks showed only two issues moving more than a point. One was Union Pacific, which fell 1½ to 87, while the other was Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing, which gained 1¼ to 64.

Westinghouse Electric was the most heavily traded issue, rising ½ to 17⅜ on a turnover of 279,500 shares. Several large blocks accounted for most of the volume. The company's high for the year was 17⅝. Yesterday, the issue traded as high as 17½.

Three telephone issues made the active list yesterday and finished higher. American Telephone and Telegraph closed up ½ to 60⅛, its highest close since 1967 when it traded at 62¾. The stock has been strong since a recent ruling by an official of the Federal Communication Commission in favor of A.T.&T. retaining its manufacturing subsidiary, Western Electric.

The other two telephone issues were General Telephone and Electronics, which added ⅜ to 29¾, and International Telephone and Telegraph, which rose ¼ to 31⅝.

Natomas moved ahead ¾ to 25¼. The company's directors increased the quarterly dividend to 35 cents a share from the 30 cents previously paid.

The Ethyl Corporation declined 2⅛ to 36¼. The company said last week that the Internal Revenue Service was seeking to collect $35 million in back taxes and interest from it.

Sharply higher earnings for the June quarter helped send Dymo Industries ahead ⅞ to 9⅞.

FRANCE REBUFFS BID FOR VINEYARD

financial difficulties after the collapse of the Bordeaux wine market in the early 1970's and the continuing glut of Bordeaux wine.

The French Ministry of Finance is understood to have disapproved of the National Distillers acquisition because other French vineyards are in American hands.

American Owners

Chateau Haut-Brion, has long been owned by C. Douglas Dillon, a Wall Street investment banker, and Chateau Boscaut is owned by a group of entrepreneurs headed by Charles Wohlstetter and Howard Sloan, two New York businessmen.

Through the Munson Shaw Company, National Distillers said it imported Grande Marque Bordeaux, Laurent Perrier champagne, Tequila Sauza, Camus cognac and other beverages.

In addition to Margaux, other famous vineyards include Haut-Brion, Lafitte-Rothschild, Mouton-Rothschild and Chateaux Latour.

H. J. Bottling Deal Put at $10 Million

Market sources reported yesterday that the International Telephone and Telegraph Corporation, which reported earlier that it had acquired the H. J. Bottling Company of Garfield, N.J., had invested "well over $10 million" in the venture. H. J. Bottling makes C.&C. Cola.

Rexnord in Accord For Rockford Products

Rexnord Inc., Milwaukee maker of power transmission components, processing machinery and other equipment, said yesterday it had reached an agreement in principle to buy the Rockford Products Corporation of Rockford, Ill., in exchange for stock valued at nearly $33 million. Rockford makes specialty fasteners.

Diamond Shamrock In Electronor Deal

The Diamond Shamrock Corporation said in Cleveland that it had completed the acquisition of patents and other assets and electrochemical research facilities owned by the Electronor Corporation for more than $50 million.

W. H. Bricker, president of Diamond Shamrock, a chemical, oil and gas producer, said the venture would enable the company to extend the use of advanced electrochemical technology and market it for new applications.

The company said it would seek a leadership position in such fields as electrodes, storage battery systems, and the electrowinning (or mining) of metals from aqueous solutions and molten salts.

Duplan Explains Delay in Report

The Duplan Corporation said yesterday it has delayed its report of results for the three and nine months ended July 4 because of "substantial writedowns" and because of discussions with its major lenders.

Pending resolution of financial uncertainties, the company requested the New York Stock Exchange to suspend trading in its common stock and 5½ percent convertible subordinated debentures. The exchange said trading would not be resumed.

Discussions are being held with four commercial banks involving $38.5 million of Duplan's senior bank debt. The talks concern Duplan's future operations, financial structure and proposals for restructuring senior and subordinated debt.

Duplan said it has begun steps to dispose of or terminate certain of its marginal manufacturing operations. Such actions would result in substantial writedowns of tangible and intangible assets.

Duplan also has withdrawn its previous estimate of a third-quarter loss of $2.1 million, which will be more because of the anticipated writedowns. The company deferred payment of interest due Aug. 1, 1976 on the debentures due 1994.

Dow Denied Permit For Styrene Facility

The Bay Area Pollution Control District has formally refused to give the Dow Chemical Company authority to build a $50 million styrene facility near San Francisco, because "it would interfere with air quality goals."

The facility was to be the first unit of a proposed $500 million Dow petrochemical complex and was designed to convert naphtha into materials for manufacture of plastic products. Dow said it would consider appealing the decision.

Du Pont Declares Regular Dividend

Directors of E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Company declared a regular quarterly dividend of $1.25 a share payable to common stockholders on Sept. 11. The amount is the same paid in the second quarter when the rate was raised from $1.

The amount of the dividend was considered disappointing by Wall Street in viw of the rise in earnings to $2.60 a common share in the second quarter from 45 cents in the depressed period a year ago. However, indications are that the company has no plans to restore the quarterly dividend to the $1.50 a share reached in 1973 when profits were at a record, but may pay a year-end extra if its income statement so dictates.

The stock was up ⅛ point to 137¾ on the Big Board yesterday.

Utility Delays Nuclear Operation

The Florida Power and Light Company, one of the largest utilities in the nation, has again delayed the operational date of its St. Lucie nuclear power plant generating unit for on-site testing and inspections of the reactor's neutron absorber pins. The work to be conducted by Combustion Engineering Inc., the nuclear system's supplier, may require replacement of certain of the absorber pins in some of the reactor's 217 fuel assemblies. This will take several months. The absorber pins are used to supplement reactor control in new nuclear units.

Canadian Arctic In New Gas Estimate

Canadian Arctic Gas Pipeline Ltd. yesterday raised the cost estimate on its proposed Mackenzie Delta pipeline to $7.4 billion from $6.6 billion.

The revised estimate on the 2,200-mile natural gas pipeline was reported based on actual costs in this year's first quarter "escalated to the time of pipeline completion." The company said this assumed Mackenzie gas deliveries would begin by July 1, 1981 and Alaska gas by July 1, 1982.

The estimate excluded pipeline facilities that would have to be built in the United States. The previous Canadian Arctic Gas estimate was based on 1975 costs escalated to the start of gas deliveries by July 1, 1980. Its revised cost estimate is also based on an initial pipeline capacity of 3.25 billion cubic feet a day including both Delta and Alaskan Gas. The cost estimate also included $1.3 billion for costs of funds used during the construction period.

Average Home Prices Up $2,000

WASHINGTON, Aug. 16 (UPI) — The rate of inflation continued to expand moderately on the home-buying front in the second quarter with the average price of a new house rising $2,000, the Government said today.

The average, new single-family home sold for $48,000 in the spring quarter, up 4.3 percent from the first quarter's $46,000 purchasing price, the Commerce Department said.

In the first quarter, the cost of buying a new home rose $1,600 or 3.6 percent from the preceding quarter, the department said.

The department said its price index of new one-family houses rose to 189.9 of the 1967 base of 100 in the second quarter. This means that a homebuyer who paid $24,600 for a house in 1967, must now pay $46,700 for a comparable dwelling.

Construction Pace Expected to Grow

The pace of new construction will continue to grow over the next two years and then slow until 1981, putting construction activity little ahead of where it was in 1973, according to a five-year industry forecast. F.W. Dodge Division of the McGraw-Hill Information Systems Company said construction contracts should reach $150 billion in 1981, assuming an average 5 percent increase a year in construction costs. The 1981 contract value would be 50 percent above 1973, but the volume of construction about the same.

"Most of what will be called expansion during the next five years will be recovery from the severe recession of 1974-75," according to the Dodge forecast. Construction of new commercial and industrial buildings will bolster the industry into 1978, but the pace then should slow as residential construction begins to drag. Despite the overall slowdown, construction of public works and utility projects will remain high through 1981 when it is expected to account for 30 percent of all building activity, Dodge said.

U.S. Steel Output Declines 1.2%

Steel output in the United States eased 1.2 percent to 2.53 million net tons in the week ended Aug. 14, the American Iron and Steel Institute reported yesterday. In the latest week the nation's mills were utilized at 83.3 percent of capacity, compared with 84.3 percent in the week of Aug. 7.

In the year to date, 82.49 million net tons of steel have been produced, a 7.9 percent advance over the 76.47 million net tons last year.

oil indirectly through the Caribbean.

Venezuelan crude supplies to the United States, on the other hand, dropped to 155,000 barrels a day from 389,000 a year earlier. Venezuelan crude was also the base for some additional 300,000 barrels of products shipped through Caribbean refineries to the United States.

Canada, the other traditional Western Hemisphere supplier of oil to American markets also cut its shipments, with exports dropping to 404,000 barrels of crude a day from 554,000 barrels a day last year.

Most Arab producers also increased their shipments to the United States. Algeria increased its exports to America to 376,000 barrels a day from 274,000; Libya raised its to 375,000 barrels a day from 129,000 barrels a day and the United Arab Emirates advanced its shipments to the United States from 90,000 barrels a day to 197,000 barrels a day.

Among the non-Arab producers, Nigeria raised its shipments to the United States to 887,000 barrels a day from 723,000 barrels a day last year while Indonesian exports rose to 484,000 barrels a day from 332,000 barrels day in the first half of 1975.

It said that three petroleum product resellers in proceedings held in June 1973 complained of difficulties in obtaining Quaker State motor oils. The judge held that the two companies caused damage to the plaintiffs by enforcing certain territorial and customer restrictions.

It further noted that the judge also held that one of the plaintiffs was liable to both Quaker State and Amoco on counterclaims based on trademark violation and unfair competition. The plaintiffs originally asked for treble damages of $24 million, which Quaker State termed "speculative and unrealistic." The company said it believed that any damages finally determined by the court would not be excessive and should not have a material effect on Quaker State's financial position.

Argentine Stocks Soar Following Miltary Coup

to open oil fields formerly reserved to the state oil company to private capital.

But the advance has been across the board, lifting all 164 stocks currently traded here. The exchange, known as the Bolsa since it was established 122 years ago, has had a long record of booms and busts. There were surges in 1955, when the military threw out a previous Peronist Government, and in 1962, when the military also ousted the Government of President Arturo Frondizi.

The turnaround had to happen after a Government that brought nothing but confusion and was going to buy the paper of companies that were headed for bankruptcy. But now, with a Government that wants to support real investment, the confidence is back, said one broker.

The market was operating until three weeks ago with a daily volume of $5 million. Last week it had expanded to $15 million.

Foreign bankers and private investors believe that further growth of the stock market here depends on certain institutional changes. These would include an effective Securities and Exchange Commission, with power to regulate the stocks offered on the market, and impose rules on brokers and corporate insiders to avoid manipulation of stock prices.

Above all, however, analysts see the future of the stock market in terms of effective reduction of inflation. The monthly rise slowed to 5 percent in June and July.

...futures tumbled ...1.22 a hundred... ...live hogs were down $1.10 a hundredweight. Pork bellies were nearly 100 points lower. Shell eggs fell 45 to 200 points, the limit decline occurring in the December delivery.

Rain fell in scattered sections of the Middle West during the last weekend, then moderately warm temperatures came on the scene, both conditions most conducive to improvement of small-grain growth. Thus, when the futures markets opened, sellers were in greater numbers than buyers. There appeared to be no other outside influence.

Soybeans eased nearly 10 points early, while oats were down 3½ and corn and wheat less than 3. Trade was mixed initially, then tapered off in volume and commercial and commission house involvement.

There was some buying, trade sources said, over concern about drought in Britain, but the Soviet Union reported that recent rains had improved the outlook for small grains. The trade still looked for expanded food and feed grain sales abroad.

At the close of grain trading soybeans were 4¾ to 6 cents a bushel lower, oats were 2 to 3½ lower, corn was 1¼ to 2¼ lower, and wheat was 1 to 2½.

The weakness in live cattle futures was attributed to selling in the wake of a cattle-on-feed report that showed a greater movement of feeder cattle into feedlots than the trade had expected. The cash market was uneasy.

Despite a higher cash market, hog futures came under selling pressure when grains and allied markets weakened. A major factor in the selloff, however, was a surplus hog run today. Pork belly futures fell nearly 100 points. This reflected a slower inquiry for stored pork bellies. Another factor in the selling was a forecast for a large hog slaughter.

Weakness in grains and indications of a lighter demand for eggs by processors appeared to induce selling.

TRADING SURGES FOR COMMODITIES

Commodity Exchange Firms Inc., never interprets its monthly statistics, the increases and decreases in the trading volume last month of several commodities provoked widespread interest in the trade. Specifically, the fact that the largest increase in trading in any commodity last month was in soybean meal, up 127,733 contracts, occurred as corn, down 67,254, showed the second biggest decrease.

The unusual interest in soybean meal was interpreted by Middle Western grain traders as a reaction to the drought in Europe, where the protein-rich livestock feed supplement is in great demand. Earlier this year many traders had assumed Europeans would be importing corn to replace rations lost because of parched pastures.

It has also been assumed that the Europeans would prefer the soybeans to the meal because of increased processing capacity there. (A 60-pound bushel of soybeans yields 48 pounds of meal and 11 of oil.) A soybean contract is 5,000 bushels. For meal it is 100 tons.

Volatility and Taxes

The second largest increase last month was in silver bullion on the New York Commodity Exchange, up 117,926 contracts of 5,000 troy ounces each. Brokers attributed the rise in silver futures volume to its volatility and frequent use as a tax spread.

Because silver is not a seasonal commodity, people trying to establish paper losses for tax purposes often believe it lends itself to such operations.

A tax-loss spread involves buying a silver contract in one year and selling it in another (or vice versa). The aim is to show a loss for the current tax year.

But the biggest volume decline posted last month, which was in Maine potatoes on the New York Mercantile Exchange, surprised no one. Volume in that commodity fell 73,418 contracts below the year-ago level, largely because of the massive default on the delivery of the May 1976 contract. A potato contract is 50,000 pounds.

The default apparently frightened away traders; others decided to await the effects of the new regulations imposed on the exchange by the Government in the wake of the scandal, brokers said.

It was also no surprise that the huge Chicago Board of Trade again handled more than half of all futures contracts traded last month—1,979,092. This compared with 1,682,535 in July 1975. For the first seven months, the Chicago Board of Trade handled 10,673,594 contracts, against 8,895,084 in the 1975 period.

Wheeling Follows Lead of U.S. Steel In Raising Prices

The Wheeling-Pittsburgh Steel Corporation announced increases yesterday on its prices for flat-rolled steel and some bar products following the lead of the United States Steel Corporation, which announced price advances Friday.

U.S. Steel announced a 4.5 percent increase on sheet and strip products effective Oct. 1. Wheeling said it would match these increases.

Wheeling also said it would raise prices on all continuous weld pipe and lift by 75 cents per hundredweight the price on three classes of electro-galvanized sheets.

Other Actions

In other pricing actions, the Cleveland-Cliffs Iron Company increased its prices for iron ore products by about 4 percent following similar increases by other producers.

PPG Industries Inc. raised prices on ethyl chloride by 1.15 cents a pound.

The International Business Machines Corporation announced price increases of 5 to 15 percent for monthly maintenance charges for 153 products. The computer manufacturer also announced price reductions of 5 to 20 percent on 40 products.

United and American Increase Earnings for July

By CLARE M. RECKERT

United Airlines, the nation's largest domestic air carrier, and American Airlines Inc., one of the leading air transport systems, reported yesterday sharply higher earnings for July, reflecting increased revenues from higher passenger traffic and from fare adjustments that went into effect this year and late last year.

The report of UAL Inc., parent of United Airlines, listed consolidated net earnings in July at $21.4 million, more than double the restated $10.4 million earned in that month last year. Operating revenues rose 16.3 percent to $256.6 million from $219.7 million.

Reduced discounts also contributed to higher yields from passenger traffic, Richard J. Ferris, president of United, stated. The Freedom Fare's capacity-control feature this year is limiting the number of discount-fare seats available for sale on each flight, depending on that flight's anticipated full-fare demand, he noted. This avoids displacing full-fare passengers from popular flights, Mr. Ferris said.

For the first seven months this year, the company incurred a deficit of $4.5 million, after a tax credit of $4.2 million. In the corresponding period last year, however, the net earnings were $6.6 million.

Revenues improved to $1.4 million from $1.3 million, but operating expenses were identical.

American Airlines, whose July earnings climbed to $17.5 million from $4.4 million in July, 1975, managed to lift its seven months' net to $33.5 million or $1.17 a share, while its results for the year-earlier period was a loss of $17.3 million. Albert V. Case, chairman and president, said the company also benefited from both an improved market share and excellent cost control. July revenues, were $196.4 million, up 23.8 percent, and for the seven months revenues of $1.1 billion climbed 19.2 percent.

PRICES ON AMEX INCREASE BY 0.09

Acquitaine Leads List — NASDAQ Drops by 0.04

Prices were little changed yesterday in quiet trading on the American Stock Exchange and on the over-the-counter market.

Advances and declines were just about even on the Amex and O-T-C markets but the market value index on the American Stock Exchange closed up 0.09 at 103.89. The price of the average share was up one cent.

Volume on the Amex was 1.86 million shares, compared with 1.64 million shares that traded last Friday.

The volume leader on the American exchange was the Acquitaine Company of Canada, which was off ½ at 20 on a turnover of 145,200 shares, including a block of 145,000 shares at 20⅛.

Resorts International Class 'A' remained active, gaining ⅝ at 6⅞ on a volume of 87,900 shares. The company, which operates hotels and gambling casinos in the Bahamas, is seeking property in the Atlantic City, N.J., area as well as a favorable vote in the Nov. 2 statewide referendum that would legalize casino gambling in Atlantic City.

One of the upside movers on the Amex was Damson Oil, which gained ½ at 6⅜ after announcing completion of two more natural gas wells.

The NASDAQ index of unlisted stocks was down 0.04 at 91.77. A total of 355 issues in the NASDAQ list advanced, 331 declined and 1,894 were unchanged. NASDAQ volume was 5.31 million shares, compared with 5.29 million traded on Friday.

The Rank Organization led the active list on the NASDAQ, closing unchanged at 2⅝ on a turnover of 226,800 shares.

Option volume on the Amex was 23,590, compared with 18,613 traded on Friday.

On the Chicago Board Options Exchange, 53,978 option contracts were traded, compared with 45,203 on Friday.

Bloomingdale's, both subsidiaries of Federated Department Stores, Inc.

High-fashion specialty stores, such as Bonwit Teller, Bergdorf Goodman, Lord & Taylor and Saks Fifth Avenue, are not expected to open. If one of the specialty stores decides it can gain some advantage from Sunday opening, it is possible that the others will follow for competitive reasons.

Mr. Ricklin said that one of the difficulties for Korvettes of Sunday openings was the recruitment of sales help. Thus far, he said, it was all voluntary. Korvettes is paying time and a half for Sunday work and, in the case of sales personnel who sell homefurnishings on a commission basis, Korvettes is paying them $50 a day. Korvettes hopes to open the five stores that remained closed this coming Sunday but this is dependent on whether it can get enough sales help.

The department stores are not expected to change their policies on inventories to meet Sunday demand, it was learned.

According to Mr. Gottlieb, Gimbels does not plan to change its inventory policy. "We will stay with our inventories as they are now," he said.

At Korvettes, Mr. Ricklin said, plans for special buying to take care of Sunday openings have not been made as yet. However, there could be Sunday promotions.

Whether the Sunday openings will have any effect on the total of retail business is yet to be seen. For the first year, retail industry observers say, it is fairly certain that store figures on a seven-day week will show considerable improvement over the six-day week of the year before. Such improvements have been shown in holiday weeks such as the Fourth of July or Labor Day weekends, when stores opened on the holidays.

Business in the leading stores in New York has been lagging. The stores have not shown any gains this year that would indicate any increase in the number of units sold.

The largest gain since the beginning of the year was in June, when the stores went ahead by 8 percent over the year-earlier month, barely enough to cover the inflation rate of 7 percent. In July, the stores showed no increase in sales volume and the months before July the best gain recorded was 7.7 percent, in January.

Amex Quarterly Net Off

The American Stock Exchange reported net income yesterday of $253,000 or the second quarter of 1976, compared with $464,000 for the second quarter of 1975. Revenue for the second quarter totaled $8.43 million, compared with $6.24 million for the comparable period in 1975.

Fed Purchase of Bills Halts Rate Rise

this key rate hit 5⅜ percent. As a result, the credit markets were satisfied that the Federal Reserve was intent on keeping short-term rates stable for a while longer.

Securities Prices Up

Prices of Treasury securities, including the three issues sold in the August refinancing, moved higher yesterday.

At the close, the Treasury's new 6⅞ percent three-year notes were offered at 100 10/32 percent of their face value. At that level, they yielded 6.76 percent, down from 6.91 percent when they were sold on Aug. 3.

The new 8 percent notes of 1986—the issue that attracted more than $24 billion of orders—closed yesterday at an offering price of 101 30/32, a premium of almost $20 per $1,000 over the original subscription price. The gain of 10/32 yesterday lowered their yield to 7.71 percent from 8 percent originally.

The new 8 percent 25-year Treasury bonds that were auctioned Aug. 6 at an average yield of 8.01 percent advanced 10/32 yesterday to an offering price of 101. At that level, the bonds yielded 7.90 percent.

The successful completion of the $14.3 billion Treasury financing operation and the purchases of Treasury securities by the Federal Reserve yesterday helped cause corporate bond prices to rise, too, dealers reported.

The Illinois Bell Telephone Company's $175 million issue of 40-year debentures, an issue that is regarded as the key to the near-term path of the corporate bond market, apparently remained less than half sold, however.

The Illinois Bell debentures were priced last Wednesday to yield 8.25 percent, the lowest rate of return on such a triple-A Bell System bond issue in 2½ years. Furthermore, the yield was 60 basis points lower than the 8.85 percent rate set on the preceding Bell System issue marketed in June.

With such a reduction in yield, the bonds, understandably enough, sold slowly and were perhaps 30 percent sold their first day. By Friday, the issue was reported approaching the half-sold mark.

Illinois Bell Strengthens

By one measure, the market for the Illinois Bell bonds strengthened. Traders who were willing to bid within ⅜-point of the full offering price of 100 last Friday bid within ¼-point yesterday.

At the same time, however, the underwriters offering the $175 million issue reported relatively few additional sales to bona fide investors.

As the Bank of New York commented in its weekly Money and Bond Markets letter, the Illinois Bell debenture offering was the first time this year that a triple-A telephone issue was "priced ahead of the market and not fully rejected."

Like many other bond reviews published yesterday, the Bank of New York called the outlook for the corporate bond market "constructive," and it said that it was "likely" that corporate bond prices would continue to rise.

Two preferred stock issues were priced late in the day for sale to investors today.

The Public Service Company of Indiana's 400,000 shares of $100-par preferred, rated Aa by Moody's and AA by Standard & Poor's, will be offered with an $8.52 annual dividend rate and at a price of $100 a share. Morgan Stanley & Company and Dean Witter & Company are co-managing the financing.

The 8.52 percent yield on the Indiana Public Service preferred is 22 basis points lower than the 8.74 percent return on a $30 million offering of Oklahoma Gas & Electric Company preferred stock sale on July 13 in the preceding offering involving Aa-rated shares.

The Reliance Insurance Company's 2 million shares of preferred stock will carry a $2.68 annual dividend rate and a price of $25 a share to yield 10.72 percent. White Weld & Company is heading the group offering the shares, which are rated BBB by Standard & Poor's.

Tax-Free Market

In the tax-exempt bond market, Jefferson County, Ky., agreed to terms for $36 million of 30-year term bonds, rated Aaa by Moody's, to finance pollution control facilities to be leased by the Louisville Gas and Electric Company.

An underwriting group led by the First Boston Corporation offered the bonds as 6⅛s at 100, and it reported them all spoken for. The formal signing of the bond sale agreement with the county is scheduled Aug. 24.

Illinois announced plans to sell $125 million of tax-exempt bonds, due 1977-2001, at competitive bidding on Sept. 1. The Port Authority of the City of St. Paul, Minn., disclosed that they will sell $66.1 million of hospital revenue bonds Aug. 31 through a group co-managed by Kidder, Peabody & Company and Miller & Schroeder Municipals.

Bernbach Steps Aside at D.D.B.

By LEONARD SLOANE

William Bernbach, an advertising man who needs no introduction, stepped aside yesterday as chief executive officer of Doyle Dane Bernbach Inc. He was succeeded in the top post of the nation's 11th largest agency by Joseph R. Daly, 58, who will continue as chairman.

Mr. Bernbach, who became 65 last Friday, was asked by the board of the publicly owned company to stay on beyond the normal mandatory retirement age and he agreed to continue as chairman of the executive committee. Last October, he signed a 10-year contract with the agency he co-founded and yesterday he said, "I'll still be doing what I have always done."

What Mr. Bernbach has done for more than two decades is serve as the creative sparkplug and conscience of the agency. In the early years of D.D.B., he wrote many ads himself; as the agency grew, he edited the work of others and taught scores of young and not-so-young men and women a great deal about advertising creativity.

Many of these Bernbach-trained creative people, including some of the alumni who left to establish their own shops, attended a birthday party that the agency gave for him last night at its new headquarters. Among those invited were George Lois of Lois Holland Calloway, Julian Koenig of Julian Koenig Inc. and Ronald Rosenfeld and Leonard Sirowitz of Rosenfeld, Sirowitz & Lawson.

Legend has it that when Mr. Bernbach, Ned Doyle and Maxwell Dane founded the agency in 1949, they flipped a coin to decide the order of their names in the title. Mr. Bernbach—who has often referred to himself as "Bernbach of Doyle Dane"—was named president to compensate for his third position on the letterhead and he has been No. 1 at the agency ever since.

Under his leadership, D.D.B. has been frequently credited with spearheading the creative revolution of the last 25 years that changed the face of much of American advertising from repetitions of product advantages to interesting print and broadcast ads that attracted the attention and sales dollars of readers, listeners and viewers. The general public, as well as the advertising community, became aware over the years of Mr. Bernbach's—and the agency's work — for such clients as Ohrbach's, Volkswagen, Levy's bread, Avis and Polaroid.

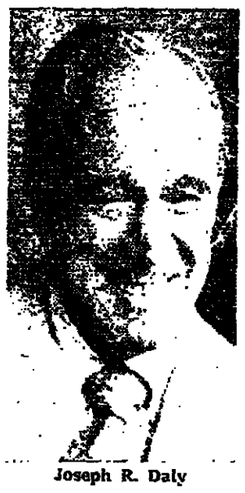
Five years after the founding of D.D.B., Mr. Daly was hired as its first account man. The former Navy fighter pilot, who won the Navy Cross during World War II, moved upward through the agency's ranks to become president in 1968, when Mr. Bernbach became chairman, and chairman in 1974, when Mr. Bernbach became chairman of the executive committee.



Joseph R. Daly

William Bernbach

In a telephone interview yesterday, Mr. Bernbach spoke primarily about Mr. Daly's capabilities to guide the destiny of D.D.B. in the years ahead. Not only were his account management skills stressed, but his judgment of creative talent and his leadership ability were also praised.

With Mr. Doyle and Mr. Dane having already retired and Mr. Bernbach now in a slightly less active role, Mr. Daly will have the opportunity to put even more of his individual imprint on the management of D.D.B. Madison Avenue will be watching.

Confidence in Foods

The General Foods Corporation is planning to break next month a million-dollar-plus national magazine campaign to help offset what it describes as "eroding consumer confidence in the food industry."

In its editorial-format campaign, General Foods hopes to clear up confusion and concern about food additives. After all, the company has a huge stake in the food business with its 400 brands. The ads created by Young & Rubicam will touch on a number of sensitive topics, such as nutritional labeling, identification of some common additives and government safety regulations.

At first glance, the ads look like letters with such headlines as "Dear General Foods, People are what they eat. So why should I eat propylene glycol monostearate?" Answers follow.

Shamrock Oil Campaign

Without benefit of a logo or formal corporate identification, the Diamond Shamrock Corporation, a major chemical, oil and gas company, will run a series of ads in trade publications as part of its new "You Know Our Name" campaign for its industrial chemicals divisions.

Starting this month and running through November the teaser ads will be illustrated by a 10-carat diamond worth $132,000 nestled among honest-to-goodness green shamrocks of Irish descent.

Meldrum & Fewsmith, the agency, had to work around armed guards from Tiffany when it shot the photograph. You know that name.

'Denimachine' Sweepstakes

A "denimachine" sweepstakes—in which 10 highway cruising vans with denim upholsery will be awarded as first prizes—will be sponsored by the Coca-Cola Company, beginning on Aug. 30. Co-sponsors are the Ford Motor Company and Levi Strauss & Company.

Geared to attract teenagers and "young adults," the sweepstakes will be promoted in magazines and Sunday supplements and on radio and television stations that appeal to that market. In addition, college newspapers and outdoor advertising will be used.

There will be 7,500 second prizes consisting of denim jeans outfits for men or women. However, no third prizes are being offered.

Prestone Starts Early

The Union Carbide Corporation began promoting its Prestone II antifreeze on television last weekend—a little earlier than usual because September is traditionally the start for that business.

The new fall campaign, prepared by Ogilvy & Mather, is strictly for network television, which includes commercials appearing on 15 major sporting events on the fall schedule. The only print ad will be one in the September issue of Reader's Digest.

The early start is designed to "further boost fall sales," according to the company. Maybe sales didn't exactly boil over last year.

dollar, compared with 2.5305 on Friday. Rumors that the value of the mark would be formally increased, remained unsubstantiated. Bonn has been intervening in the market to keep the mark within the float limits.

Because they were unable to remain within the trading limits, both the French and the Italians, whose currency has also been weak, are not in the agreement. France withdraw last spring.

The franc closed at 5.0080 per dollar, compared with 5 on Friday. The pound closed at $1.7815, up from $1.7813 on Friday, although it declined against most Continental currencies. And the dollar was about unchanged against the Swiss franc at 2.4878.

By ANDREW H. MALCOLM
Special to The New York Times

TOKYO, Aug. 16—Brisk trading pushed the yen's value up sharply today to 290.05 to the dollar, its highest level in 15 months. The sudden advance reflected similar movements on European and American markets at the end of last week.

Spot dollar trading totaled $185 million, compared with $139.3 million Friday, when the yen closed at 292.6 to the dollar. A greater number of yen per dollar means a lower value for each yen. When a country's currency value is relatively low, its exports are generally more competitive.

Trading Rate Varies

Today's trading rate varied during the day from 290.8 at the opening up to 290.05 at the close. The rate was last at the 290 level in May 1975.

Today's yen rise, although sharp, came as no surprise to bankers and financial analysts here. They had been waiting all weekend to see the local impact of Friday's feverish European trading in which the yen rose to 291 to the dollar.

The yen's upward move began shortly after the San Juan economic summit conference in late June. Japan was implicitly criticized at the conference for seeking to maintain an undervalued yen to spur exports and move this island nation out of its two-year-old recession. However, today's rise in the yen's value apparently occurred without intervention by the central bank. Until recent weeks the yen had been hovering around 300 to the dollar.

Since mid-July it has been moving around the 293 level, as Japan's booming exports, which totaled $5.6 billion in June alone, produced a foreign-exchange reserve of $15.94 billion as of July 31.

July's export figures have not been announced yet, but Japanese businessmen have maintained in recent weeks that a rise in the yen's value to 293 or 290 would not severely affect exports, which so far have been the main support of the economic recovery here.

In fact, the current yen developments are actually aiding Japan in its continuing fight against inflation, currently running at an annual rate of about 10 percent. This is because the more valuable yen will enable this resource-poor nation to buy its vital, but increasingly expensive raw materials abroad for, in effect, less money.

Nonetheless, it is generally believed here that the Central Bank of Japan will resume its selective intervention in the currency trading market if the yen's value should pass the 290 to the dollar level. The point of the intervention would be to prevent too great an increase in the yen's value.

The central bank disclosed yesterday that wholesale prices had jumped sharply in July by 1 percent, the largest monthly increase in two years, and twice that of June. The increase was the 13th in succession and the central bank said it planned no change in its policy of monetary ease as a result.

The increase in wholesale prices mirrors similar increases in other industrialized countries. The United States showed a 0.3 percent increase in July. Analysts here attributed Japan's higher increase to rising costs for steel, oil refining and electric power as well as to rising international costs for imported raw materials.

Other Factors in Advance

Japan's favorable export trade also results in an excess of dollars in the hands of exporters here. They want to sell the dollars for yen for domestic use.

In addition to strong foreign trade, other factors are pushing up the value of the yen. A major factor is the continuing internationalization of the yen, which began in mid-1960.

Japan has been encouraging the sale of Government bonds to overseas buyers, especially Middle Eastern oil countries diversifying their holdings. Yen-based foreign bonds have also been encouraged. As a result, Finland, for example, has floated a 10 billion yen national bond issue and the Asian Development Bank has sold a 15 billion yen issue.

Switch From Pounds

In addition, with the decline in value of the British pound, especially since the beginning of this year, many countries have sold their pound reserves and switched to stronger currencies, including the yen.

Also, buyers of Japanese goods such as ships and heavy machinery have sought to minimize their exchange risks by holding yen-based assets corresponding to their yen debts.

Bank of Japan officials say they welcome a gradual increase in such holdings, but they want to avoid heavy speculation through overseas yen holdings, which could disrupt domestic monetary policies.

RT APPROVES IL, GAS LEASING

he proposed leasing of 50 acres in an area of the ic 60 miles south of Long and 47 to 90 miles east v Jersey.

ording to Judge Wein- the Interior Department red in assuming that oil atural-gas on this Outer ental Shelf of the Atlan- ould be transported h pipelines to the East environmental impact ent failed to take into t the power of states to t pipelines and related s on their shores, Judge ein said, adding that it be necessary to trans- e oil by tankers if the rohibited the pipelines. use of tankers, he said, reatly increase the dan- ger of destructive oil spills that could harm the environment.

The lack of any "meaningful discussion of this vital dimension of the environmental problem" violated the National Environmental Policy Act, according to Judge Weinstein, who enjoined the lease sale pending a trial of the environmental issues in the case.

In his decision, granting the preliminary injunction, he said that "more coordination" was needed between the Federal Government and the states to "predict with accuracy" what impact the offshore development program would have on the seashore.

The Federal Government, which appealed the imposition of the preliminary injunction, argued in the Court of Appeals yesterday that "the United States will suffer serious economic injury and the public interest will be gravely damaged by any delay" in the scheduled sale of the leases.

J. Christopher Jensen, an assistant United States attorney, stressed that the lease sale was "only the first step" and that it would be at least three years before oil production could start.

Mr. Jensen said that the Government could suspend the operations if environmental hazards were determined later by the Secretary of the Interior.

Joseph J. Zedrosser, an assistant attorney general for New York State, argued that the appeals court should not lift the preliminary injunction that Judge Weinstein had issued on environmental grounds.

But Judge Van Graafeiland, who presided over the panel in the appeals court, focused on the question of irreparable injury, which is a basic requirement for a preliminary injunction.

The panel's three judges joined in writing a two-page decision staying the preliminary injunction on the ground that the scheduled sale of the leases would not cause any irreparable injury because the appeals court will hear the environmental arguments next month while any oil production that might harm the environment would not get under way for at least three years.

"On the other hand," they said, "the national interests, looking toward relief of this country's energy crisis, will be clearly damaged if the proposed sale is aborted."

They set the week of Sept. 27 for the Court of Appeals to hear arguments in the case.

Battle for Hughes Estate Delayed Pending Will Ruling

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 16 (UPI) —The battle in California over the estate of the late Howard R. Hughes will be delayed pending the outcome of court proceedings in Nevada over the authenticity of a purported 1968 will of Mr. Hughes, a Los Angeles judge ruled today.

Superior Court Judge Neil Lake continued until Jan. 7, 1977 various motions by Bruce Altman, Los Angeles County public administrator, Noah Dietrich, once Mr. Hughes's top aide and Richard Gano, California special administrator.

More than 20 purported wills have been found since Mr. Hughes died on on April 5. One, purportedly written in 1968, divides the Hughes fortune among to persons and institutions and names Mr. Dietrich as executor.

Harold Rhoden, the attorney representing Mr. Dietrich, said that on Aug. 27 he would move for a jury trial in Las Vegas, Nev., on the legitimacy of that document and would seek a Nov. 1 trial date.

A Rare Inside Look at Green Haven Prison, Troubled but Innovative State Institution

By NATHANIEL SHEPPARD Jr.

The talk among inmates of the maximum-security Green Haven prison in Stormville, N.Y., is not about the sifting of sand on Mars or the merits of Jimmy Carter, Ronald Reagan or Gerald Ford. Rather the talk is about new rules that deny inmates the privilege of growing their own flowers and vegetables or possessing postage stamps.

There is concern and irritation that weekend visits by relatives and friends have been reduced from four a month to two weekends a month, and that inmates sometimes have to wait hours crowded into a narrow hall to buy supplies at the commissary's two service windows.

"It might be hard for you to understand how something as simple as a vegetable garden or a flower box could be a big issue, but it is the kind of thing that means a lot to us in here," Roger Whitfield, an inmate, said during a highly unusual round-table discussion between inmates and a reporter at Green Haven Correctional Facility, 80 miles north of New York City.

'Still Productive'

"It is a symbol that we can be and are still productive," Mr. Whitfield said as other inmates—dressed in their prison-issue jeans and shirts—sat around a long table in the modest library, nodded and added their own comments.

It was a rare instance in which inmates at a maximum-security facility have been allowed to speak as a group to outsiders—especially a reporter—without prison officials listening. Some of the inmates had been in the prison system most of their adult lives, others were first-timers.

On a tour of the facilities, some inmates showed no signs of the strains of prison life. In others, it was clear—furrowed brows, hardened faces, worn-out bodies.

The men—who were doing time for a variety of offenses that included murder, robbery, possession and sale of dangerous drugs, assault—told of self-imposed ethnic distinctions and administration-imposed job and cell assignments that worked to establish a sort of class system.

There are 1,786 inmates at the institution—a figure that can change from week to week—and 535 correction officers. About 60 percent of the inmates are black, 20 percent Puerto Rican and 20 percent white. Less than 25 percent of the correction officers are black or Puerto Rican.

On a tour of the prison's yard—an outside area slightly larger than a football field that is the only outdoor spot some inmates get to see—one inmate explained how the prison was segregated along color lines.

"The blacks have their ball court, the Puerto Ricans have theirs and the whites have theirs," Rasul Suliaman said, pointing around the yard under the watchful eyes of guards posted in gun towers along the high wall that surrounds the area.

Brother Rasul, as he is called at Green Haven, was born Robert Smith. He was at one time the bodyguard of Malcolm X and he is now the imam, or leader, of the Sunni religious sect at the prison. He is serving a sentence for robbery.

He said the seating in the prison's mess hall was also voluntarily divided along racial lines and that many social activities were ethnic-oriented, explaining that the men simply reflected the society from which they came.

Similarly, many inmate-run programs, such as the Italian Culture Class, NuBlack Studies Program, and PUL (a Puerto Rican organization), are set up along color lines.

Cell assignments at the facility, which covers 925 acres and first opened in 1941 as an Army disciplinary barracks, results in a class structure that favors some men against others, the inmates said.

They explained the cell-assignment patterns and their significance during a walk through the institution's long narrow corridors, which had small windows covered with bars that allowed modest amounts of light to filter in.

East Side Is Rough

"Here we have the east side, which is considered the working class, or poor side of town," said Mr. Whitfield, who has served 10 years of a murder sentence and is considered a model inmate by prison officials who are supporting his bid for executive clemency.

"It has the toughest men and the toughest guards and the sweatshop jobs that pay about 80 cents a day," he said, pointing out rooms with machinery in them.

The area reminded one of the halls of a high school between classes. The inmates, who seemed to be in good physical condition, moved about swiftly in small groups talking and joking with each other. Some at ice cream from cups, others were smoking cigarettes.

There was litter along some of the walls and in some corners. The cells on the east side were small and plain, containing a sink, toilet and small bed. Shower stalls were at the end of the cell block.

Some of the men exchanged greetings with the reporter; others did not as much as acknowledge his presence. During the walk to the west side men could be seen weight lifting in the yard.

The accommodations on the west side of the facility were noticeably different. The cells in the so-called honor blocks were larger than those on the east side and many were decorated with pictures and posters. The halls were much less littered.

$1 a Day for Jobs

"This is where the inmates with the higher paying and more prestigious jobs, such as clerks and kitchen workers and office helpers, stay," Mr. Whitfield explained. He said they earned a bit more than $1 a day.

"This is the side they send you to when you have a good record or they feel they can trust you and send you to places without trouble," he said.

On the honor blocks of the west side, inmates can move about their areas between 6 P.M. and 11 P.M., while on the east side the inmates remain locked in after the 5 P.M. head count, except on alternate nights when they are assigned to yard recreation.

The importance of the distinctions between the two sides was underscored about two months ago, the man said, when a group of kitchen workers went on strike to protest a change in job assignments that would require them to move to the east side and lose certain privileges. As a result of the strike some of the assignments were changed.

The inmates agreed nevertheless that despite what they considered some serious problems, Green Haven still ranked high above many other prisons they had been in.

They said they liked the place most of all because of its comparative nearness to New York City, which made visits by relatives and friends easier.

And they said they also liked the availability of improvement programs, though some expressed disappointment that the successful completion of the programs did not seem to improve their lot.

Self-Help Questioned

"They are always telling us to get ourselves together and better ourselves," one inmate said, "but when we do, nothing seems to happen. Something has to happen to make us feel that it is worthwhile."

The inmates said their biggest problems involved grievance procedures and parole and furlough changes they were seeking. But on a day-to-day basis they said there were the following primary areas of concern:

¶The alleged harassment by some guards.

¶The denial of inmates' right to possess postage stamps.

Problems Discussed

Walter Fogg, the acting superintendent, and Hylan T. Sperbeck, his security chief, explained the reasons for some of the restrictions during an interview.

Mr. Fogg acknowledged there were probably some instances of harassment by guards, but emphatically denied that it was widespread.

He said he did not favor inmates possessing postage stamps because "it makes it easy for them to conduct their gambling operations."

And Mr. Fogg said weekend visitations had been reduced "because of the large number of visitors and the security problems that they involved.

Captain Sperbeck explained the ban on inmates' gardens by saying that tall plants such as corn would make it difficult for the guards to watch the inmates and that dug-up ground might serve as a hiding place for weapons and other contraband.

Mr. Fogg said officials had "tried 15 different things to solve the commissary problem but none has worked."

"It seems we can't keep up with the money the inmates have to spend," he said.

Green Haven has moved from a posture that forced officials to close down the institution temporarily in 1973 to one in which it is considered a testing ground for innovative programs.

Innovation Listed

For example the inmate grievance program that was introduced into all the states prison facilities in February was started on a trial basis at Green Haven last November.

Similarly, the inmate pre-release program, which helps inmates scheduled for parole or release to prepare for life outside began here and is being considered as a model for use in other prisons.

But Green Haven still has serious problems. There are allegations, by inmates, for instance, that a man was badly beaten about two months ago while being taken to solitary confinement.

And they recall how trouble seemed near last April when officials at first decided not to allow family visits on Puerto Rican Liberation Day.

What they remember most bitterly is the death of an inmate, Oliver Robinson, in April 1975. Mr. Robinson died after being subdued by guards following an apparently psychotic outburst. Prisoners who said they witnessed the incident said he had been beaten, water-hosed and tear-gased by the guards.

State officials in Albany say Green Haven is among five prisons in the state that are considered "volatile." As a result, the five institutions are to get closer attention and scrutiny, the officials said.

Officials at Green Haven acknowledges that there are problems but played down theidea of tension. They said they regarded the major problems as overcrowding and budget.

State prison officials say it costs the taxpayer about $11,700 a year for each inmate to maintain him in a prison facility.

"If all our men were here instead of some being on leave for serious illness or death in their families we wouldn't have any place to put them," the deputy superintendent at Green Haven, Joseph P. Curry, said. "We have an inmate population of 1,786 and living space for 1,740," he said.

Mr. Fogg said that despite the institution's $10 million budget, there were $25,000 worth of jobs vacant each pay period because of the current hiring freeze.

"All of our innovative programs — such as the inmate-grievance program and the pre-release program—are fine and good, but we are running out of funds and personnel to run them," he said.

CATHOLICS POLLED ON COMATOSE CASES

CHICAGO, Aug. 16 (Reuters)—A poll of readers of the national magazine U.S. Catholic has found strong sentiment against the use of extraordinary medical measures in hopeless cases.

Readers were asked what they would do if they were named legal guardian of a comatose man with irreversible brain damage who was receiving intravenous feeding and whose breathing was being assisted by an artificial respirator.

Forty-five percent said that they would remove the respirator and discontinue the feedings, and 38 percent said that they would remove the respirator.

The hypothetical situation parallels the case of Karen Anne Quinlan, a New Jersey girl comatose for the last 16 months. Her parents won a long court fight to remove her respirator, and the young woman has survived without it for two and a half months.

The magazine's 60,000 readers here also asked to judge a husband who refused surgery for his seriously injured wife after learning that she would be left an invalid and perhaps permanently comatose.

Fifty percent agreed with the husband's actions, and 34 percent said that he was morally wrong.

Museum Ends Its On Study of Cat S

Officials and researchers at the American Museum of Natural History ended yesterday a month-long silence on their study of the sex lives of cats and denied that their experiments were cruel and without social merit, as critics have charged.

And, for the first time since the controversy over the experiments began to escalate in July, the museum allowed visitors to talk directly with the principal researchers, Dr. Lester R. Aronson and Madeline Cooper, and to see the laboratories in which the cats are kept and experimented on.

Opponents of the experimentation have picketed the museum almost weekly for the last two months. Last Saturday, several hundred people in addition to members of animal rights groups demonstrated in front of the museum on Central Park West between 79th and 81st Streets.

The museum has been engaged in the experiments for the last 15 years at a cost to taxpayers of close to $500,000.

What Is Involved

According to grant applications submitted to the National Institutes of Health, the division of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare that finances the project, the experiments involved studying the sexual performance of cats after the following the experiments:

¶Blinding by the destruction of the optic nerves.

¶Deafening by the destruction of a portion of the inner ear.

¶Eliminating the sense of smell by destruction of olfactory bulbs in the brain.

Aim Was Withheld

In the past, the museum has refused to describe the experiments or to explain their purpose, other than to say they were to "advance our knowledge and understanding of nature and related to the problems of hypersexuality and hyposexuality in humans."

Yesterday, in his small fifth-floor office appointed with plastic-covered furniture, a bubbling aquarium and pictures of a cat and a dinosaur, Dr. Aronson said that his experiments were the outgrowth of the discovery 20 years ago that lesions, or wounds, in the brain appeared to affect sexual behavior in humans.

"We are not looking so much for a solution to human problems yet because we must first understand how sexual mechanisms work," Dr. Aronson said. "My feeling is that the people ma marks abo terrible dis

Cold front: a boundary between cold air and warmer air under which the colder air pushes like a wedge, usually southward and east.

Warm front: a boundary between warm air and retreating wedge of colder air over which the warm air is forced as it advances, usually north and east.

Occluded front: a line along which warm air was lifted by opposing wedges of cold air, often causing precipitation.

Shaded areas indicate precipitation.

Dashed lines show forecast afternoon maximum temperatures.

Isobars are lines (solid black) of equal barometric pressure (in inches), corrected to sea level.

Wind arrows point in direction wind is moving toward the center of low-pressure systems, clockwise curving and counterclockwise from high-pressure areas. Pressures, storms usually move east.

INDIA SAYS IT HOLDS ABOUT 7,000 PEOPLE

NEW DELHI, Aug 16 (Reuters)-Home Minister Brahmananda Reddy indicated today that about 7,000 people were still being detained without trial throughout the country under the emergency laws.

He was speaking during a debate in the lower house of Parliament on a bill to extend arrest and detention powers under the Internal Security Act for a second year. The bill, which in effect replaces a presidential ordinance of last June, was enacted by an overwhelming majority.

Mr. Reddy would not give exact figures for the number of people held under this act since the emergency was imposed in June, 1975, but the rough figures he gave were the first official indication of how many have been detained.

He said that roughly speaking the number of detentions came to two out of every 100,000 of the population, or about 12,000. About a third were economic offenders, like smugglers and black marketeers.

Mr. Reddy said that about 30 per cent of the detainees had been released and 10 per cent were on parole.

General Walker, 66 years old, will be tried in the Dallas County criminal court of Judge F. Harold Entz.

"Our purpose is not to demonstrate what an actual week of British television is like, but rather what British programs are like," said Muir Sutherland, chief executive of Thames Television International, the company's foreign-sales division.

American viewers have been exposed to such exceptional Thames programs as "The World at War," "Jennie, Lady Randolph Churchill" and "Destination America," but not to the regular light entertainment and news programs, he pointed out.

On WOR-TV, the Thames schedule will begin at 5:30 P.M. with children's programs — stories and documentaries drawn from series entitled "Shadows" and "Rainbows" — and will end around 2 A.M. with a 15-minute discussion series, "Problems," dealing with a range of sexual difficulties common among adults.

A one-hour news-magazine program, which will be presented nightly at 6 o'clock, is to be carried simultaneously in London and will involve switching between the two countries.

Eamonn Andrews, the regular newscaster for Thames, will anchor the program from New York, cutting away to Dick Cavett for his impressions of London. Each program is to carry a 20-minute wrapup of British and international news presented in the style of "News at Ten," the popular newscast on England's commercial network.

The hour from 7 P.M. to 8 will be devoted to Thames's leading situation comedies, "Father, Dear Father," "Get Some In," "Bless This House," "Love Thy Neighbor" and "Man About the House." ABC has purchased the rights to "Man About the House" for an American version called "Three's a Crowd."

Gielgud in Greene Series

Sir John Gielgud will star in one of the episodes of "Shades of Greene," the series based on the Graham Greene stories.

The documentaries include "The Agony of Ulster," on the war in Northern Ireland; "Till I End My Song," a poetic film tracing the course of the Thames River, and "The Playwright," a profile of Alan Ayckbourn, author of "Absurd Person Singular" and "The Norman Conquests."

Scheduled around midnight each night are episodes of "Man at the Top," the series with an antihero drawn from John Braine's best-seller, "Room at the Top."

Chiller Anthology

That is to be followed at 1 A.M. or 1:30 by "Tales of Mystery and Imagination," a chiller anthology offering new productions of "Frankenstein," "Dracula" and "The Curse of the Mummy."

This will not be the first time a British television company has presented itself wholesale in a foreign country.

Thames Television mounted a similar "week" in Japan in 1970, and Border Television, another of England's independents, once staged a two-week festival on Swedish television.

According to Mr. Sutherland, the Thames executive, the advertising sold during the five nights—to American advertisers as well as to British—may, with luck, just cover the cost of the event.

Why is Thames doing it?

Mr. Sutherland explained: "We want our company to be better known as a leading light of our system, both in programming and corporately."

57 Recoup Losses And Get Diplomas From High School

August is an unusual month for a high school graduation, but 57 young men and women who seemed headed for certain scholastic failure three years ago marched across the stage of Columbia University's Wollman Auditorium Sunday night to receive their diplomas.

The graduates had just completed Columbia's Project Double Discovery, an intensive program of remedial education and counseling.

When they were tested after their freshman year in local high schools, most were found to be three years behind their grade reading level, and all displayed such a lack of motivation that none were expected to stay in school.

Not only did they stay in school, but they also spent school-year Saturdays and three six-week summer sessions in the program.

The result: 55 of the 57 are headed for college.

The program, started in 1965 and financed largely by the Federal Government at a cost of $300,000 a year, offers the participants — mostly low-income residents of Central Harlem who attend Louis D. Brandeis and Benjamin Franklin High Schools—basic courses in English, mathematics and science, assorted electives and special tutoring, all designed to let the one-time failures discover their potential for success.

Everybody knew Watergate was only the tip of the iceberg. It wasn't just "a third-rate burglary." But nobody knew the real reason behind it. In the September issue of PLAYBOY, you'll learn what that reason is, and you'll also learn about the high-level, big-money dealings that spawned our biggest Governmental shake-up in history.

In a startling two-part story entitled The Puppet and the Puppetmasters, you'll read how the Hughes empire became a front for the Central Intelligence Agency. And then you'll find out how Howard Hughes used that alliance and his wealth to gain defense contracts and favorable legislation—and to help buy the Presidency for Richard Nixon.

You'll be stunned by the complex and clandestine maneuverings of the Hughes-CIA cabal. The pay-offs. The secret memos. The under-the-table deals that mocked our electoral system and gave the highest offices in the land to the highest bidders.

And when you've absorbed all that, we'll tell you how the cover-up was accomplished and how the news media were misled in their efforts to uncover the complete story.

It's a detailed exposé pieced together from a year of intensive digging by investigative reporters Larry DuBois and Laurence Gonzales. And it's all true. It's all documented. And it's only in the September issue of PLAYBOY. At your newsstand now.

If finding the inside story on Watergate in PLAYBOY surprises you, it shouldn't. Hard-hitting investigative reporting has alw been a part of PLAYBOY's diverse and fare. An editorial mix that keeps mor 17,000,000 readers involved and info every single month. And while our re benefit, so do our advertisers. Becaus same involvement is reflected in resp PLAYBOY's advertisers.

That's why our September issue is fourth consecutive issue to top our ad for the same period last year. And wh October issue will be our biggest Octo issue in years. And that's an inside sto shouldn't surprise you at all.
